Call for an EC debate

A GRAND debate on Britain's place in the European Community is demanded today by an eminent group of academics and politicans. Mackay demands a halt to the soaring cost of legal aid high level of spending .

THE Lord Chancellor called yes-terday for radical changes in the a position to procure the necessary legal aid scheme to curb rising costs and provide taxpayers with a better service. Lord Mackay of Clashfern said that the net cost of the legal aid scheme had risen by an average of 17 per cent over the past ten years. That could not continue indefinitely. "In gross terms - what legal aid actually pays the lawyers - we are now spending more than £1,000 million each year and rising," he told 300 legal aid solicitors gathered in Coventry to discuss the future of the system.

Lord Mackay said that he had responsibility to provide the means for "reasonable access" to justice and for controlling the high means at any price and on any terms. We are just about at the limit of what is supportable without radical change

He intended to take steps to secure better value for money and to raise standards. Lawyers had paid more attention to standards of behaviour than to standards of competence in recent years, resulting in a level of competence that was far from uniform.

He outlined plans for a "radical overhaul" of the system for paying solicitors and for quality control over the service that they provide. On criminal legal aid, he spoke of his plans to bring in a system of fixed fees in the magistrates'

Philip Ely, president of the Law Society, accepted that the government faced a dilemma over legal aid and he accepted the inevitability of some firms being selected as "preferred suppliers". Kiss of friendship: a Kuwaiti girl whose father is a prisoner of war in Kuwait greeting John Major at Downing Street yesterday. The prime minister later told the Emir of Kuwait, Sheikh Jaher al-Ahmed al-Sabah, that Britain would continue to press for the return of Kuwaiti detainees still held in Iraq after the Gulf war (Richard Ford writes). Mr Major also pledged that Saddam Hussein would not be allowed to rebuild a muclear, biological and chemical weapons capability with which Iraq could intimidate its neighbours and threaten the stability of the region.

joined Labour in increasing pressure on the government to demonstrate its commitment to state-fimded medical care.

John Major said: "In real damaging the NHS and no terms, the amount of resources for the health service NHS... I will build the NHS has gone up by about 50 per cent. I say, without any besitation, it will go on rising year after year. That is what I will tell people in the election." .

Mr Major's intervention came against the background of Neil Kinnock's attempt to make the health service the main election battleground and renewed warnings from the British Medical Association that the principles underpinning the health service are at risk.

The moves by Labour and the BMA coincide with the results of a survey published by The Times showing that many of the hospitals that have opted out of health authority control are running out of money and are likely to have to close wards and turn. away patients this winter.

POLITICIANS are not averse to fudging the facts for the sake of a sterling speech and Neil Kinnock would appear to be no exception when it comes to science and technology. He cited several worldbeating British inventions during his opening address at the Labour conference in Brighton on Tuesday which had then been developed and made abroad. A Labour government would change this unsatisfactory state of affairs, he said

The scientific world, however, might dispute the Britishness of some of the examples given.

"Everyone knows that British scientists invented the first steam engine, the first electric motors and generators and transformers, radio, television, the first jet engine, the first cardiograph, penicillin, the first computer," Mr Kinnock said.

According to well placed sources in the legal establishment, the police decision not to recommend that Sir Alian be prosecuted for kerbcrawling has probably saved him from the further crushing blow of being suspended from the Bar, or even disbarred. This means that Sir Allan, a member of the Bar Council, might return, after a discreet interval, to working as an advocate.

Under the Bar's rules, Sir Allan, stopped by police late on Wednesday night for alleged kerb-crawling at King's Cross, London, will have to present himself before the Bar's professional

Anthony Scrivener, QC, the Bar's chairman, studi-ously declined yesterday to say whether Sir Allan, who is widely respected within the legal profession, should face further indignity. Sir Allan, who had a salary of £77,000 a year as DPP and head of the Crown Prosecution Service, used to be a leading prosecutor at the Central Criminal Court. Although the legal establish-are rare in the legal profession, but where the offence - real or suspected - is sexual in nature, the fall from grace is always severe. For example, in December 1989, Lord Dervaird, a Scottish High Court judge, abrupty resigoed amid allegations that he had been involved in homosexual activity, and this summer, Timothy Parkin, an assistant recorder, resigned after being convicted of kerb-crawling in Leeds

By contrast, barristers and dges who commit other offences, including drinkdriving, seem to escape comparatively lightly. One prominent case being cited yesterday was that of the late Lord Russell of Killowen, a law lord, who cootinued in his earlier office of an appeal judge in spite of being panned from the road for drink-driving in 1969. Peter Kenworthy-Browne, a registrar in the High Court family division, declined to resign after being fined for drink-driving in May 1989.

Vice that provokes a Gallic shrug

By BILL FROST AND PHILIP JACOBSON

DALLIANCE with a street walker still spells disaster for prominent public figures in Britain. Elsewhere in Europe, the high and the mighty are free to kerb crawl with impunity, should the humour take them.

The Germans share the same rigid Anglo-Saxon moral code, but only when the 13th commandment thou shalt not be caught out has been conspicuously broken.

Neither the French oor the Italian police bother to prosecute the kerb crawler. In fact, the activity is oot regarded as an offence, simply an expression of male vices in public, Italians take sexuality and the law of supply and demand.

The downfall of Sir Allan Green passed almost unnoticed in France. Only Liberation, the left-leaning daily, covered the story under the headline "Sir Allan Trips on the Kerb".

French politicians and public figures with a taste for illicit entanglements far prefer the privacy of a mistress's flat or an up-market brothel to the hurly-burly of Place Pigalle. Such is the nature of the Gallic psyche, however, that oo one would care too much if they did parade their a similarly relaxed view of moral surpisude. Prostitutes used to line

He also announced that the grant could be out further if more than 15 per ceot of an authority's primary or secondary schools opted out. The educatioo department would determice what figure was

Jack Straw, Labour's education spokesman, said: "Mr Clarke has yielded to intense pressure, oot least from Cooservative authorities, which are deeply hostile to optiog out, but the financial system for grant maintained stacked in their favour, contrary to the government's promises of financial neutral-

Mr Clarke resisted the temptation to end the link with local authority budgets in order to retain the stability and predictability it provides for all types of school.

Conference hailed as turning point for party

NEIL KINNOCK made it clear yesterday that he would paign. Winding up the party conference in Brightnn yes-terday, he told cheering delegates: "In their efforts to try to save themselves from disaster at the election, the Tories will go to any lengths, they will sink to any depths, stoop to any depths, in their desperate efforts to conquer.

"I say now as I have said throughout we shall not respond in kind with biliousness and slander for two reasons. First, it sickens the British people. Second, when I hear some attacks on these people (the shadow cabinet] and people up and down the country in local government and trade unionism, people active in our movement and community generally, much as I detest Toryism, I would not do to individuals and families what they try to do to individuals and

Close to a winning hand in the last chance saloon

By ROBIN OAKLEY POLITICAL EDITOR

THIS week's Labour party gathering may have been bland in between the Sixties songs, but it was effective, a rally rather than a conference.

Neil Kinnock was better focused on Labour's alternative than ever. Roy Hattersley, now, like his leader, in the last chance saloon, has rediscovered his political zest. And the shadow team beneath them, the leadership candidates if it does go wrong after all, displayed their talents. If Gordon Brown had the best jokes, John Smith retains Labour's best line in gravitas.

We sentimentalists in the media may have longed at times for the old Labour party that wore hearts on its sleeves, when a rampant left packed in hundreds at its fringe meetings and when the tension between MPs, constituency delegates and union bosses positively crackled across the conference floor. But this is the age of the compliant party and the sound-bite

As Neil Kinnock spoke, the party's media professionals were not out on the floor but clustered round television sets. It was not how it was that mattered, but how it looked. And what viewers saw was a the fact that the prime minister could not risk a November election, cheered to have reversed the late summer polls and increasingly convinced that its nostrums are coming back into fashion.

Kinnock and Smith, Beckett and Brown, exuded reassurance like company solicitors. The tone of the leader's speech was an optimistic "We too can do it", placed firmly in a European surely show in government, there does appear to have been a sea change on Europe. "We have been bonded by the Social Charter" was how one union leader put it.

We caught a glimpse of the service, where Labour feels instinctively that it has public support. The delegates feel too that it is Labour which is best placed to profit from the ending of the "public bad, private good" ethos of the Thatcher years. Mr Kinnock has not only restored their will to win but made them feel relevant too.

But you still have to pinch yourself when you hear Labour speakers obsequiously praising their leader in the way they did this week. "Altogether too much Kim II Sung-ism" sniffed one shadow cabinet minister, adding that confident party, boosted by he hoped Mr Kinnock would not be staying on to 85. But if much went well this week there remain many unanswered questions. John surge for the Tories in opinion Smith has told us that the new

It has still not mana pin the problems which the country has suffered under Tory government on the popular John Major, although the longer he is in the job the easier that should become.

The flurry over the huge contributions to the Tory party from various millionaires has obscured Labour's problems with the union connection but not removed them. And the much publicised reminder from Tony Benn that "If we've changed our minds to win, we could change our minds when we've won" will enable the Torics to keep exploiting a Labour hid-den agenda, as Labour seeks to exploit theirs.

But perhaps Labour's biggest problem is that the barroom talk in Brighton still turned much on what would bappen in a hung parliament. Delegates do not quite believe that the party will do it in one go. Hence the great interest in what turned out to be a poor debate on PR (and one which reflected the new mood by showing the PR tide on the conference floor ebbing a little). The subject is still there, however, and it continues to divide both party and shadow

For all that, Labour had a good week and one which will put the onus on Mr Major to produce something more than "steady as she goes" in Blackpool. The Tories, 100, need to find an instinctive theme to appeal to the electorate and to show, as they did in 1986, that they still have plenty of ideas. "Time for a change" could be a powerful pull

Driver in fatal crash sent back to prison

A DRINK-DRIVER who served 28 days to prison for causing a friend's death was returned to jail for a longer sentence yesterday. The Court of Appeal said Edward Peter Dillon had been treated too leniently and increased his sentence to 12 munths.

Dillon was nearly twice over the alcohol limit when he crashed his car, killing his passenger, James Sweeney. Dillon then drove away and abandoned the vehicle with Mr Sweeney's body beside it. He told police: "I was scared and frightened. I just wanted to get away.

Yesterday, Lord Justice Stuart-Smith said that Dillon, aged 28, of Oldham, Greater Manchester, had been distressed to lose a close friend. but aggravating features of the case were obvious and Judge Webster's sentence at Manchester crown court was outside the proper range.

Dillon had been sentenced in January after admitting causing death by reckless driv-ing, drink driving and failing to stop after an accident. A longer sentence was sought by the Attorney-general.

Internal market anomalies may cause hospital work cuts

Sign of the times: political posters outside Guy's

HOSPITALS in London are in greater financial difficulties than those in other parts of the country, with several saying that they will have to cut workloads later this year or extend Christmas closures. Nine of the 12 undergraduate teaching hospitals in London are already overspent half way through the financial year, partly due to increased workloads and also due to a shortage of feeearning referrals on top of those negotiated in block contracts last April. GPs in the shires are beginning to refer closer to home, where prices are often less than those of teaching hospitals bearing high labour costs and capital charges.
The findings, in a survey by The Times of 57 trusts and 33 directly managed hospitals, coincide with a decision, expected to be anoounced next week, by William Waldegrave, the health secretary, to set up an independent enquiry into effects of the internal market on London. He is concerned that if the market is allowed to "let rip", unplanned, haphazard ward closures will follow.

Two of the seven London trusts are overspent, with Guy's trust heading for a £2 million deficit next year if it fails to take corrective steps. It has treated 10 per cent more patients under block contracts, for which it gets no extra pay, but drew 30 per cent fewer than expected extra-contractual referrals, for which it can charge.

Directly managed hospitals

Jill Sherman, continuing her survey of hospitals that are fending for themselves, finds the going harder in London such as St Mary's, Paddington, Northwick Park, Harrow, and Charing Cross, in west London, are also heavily overspent. St Mary's is £450,000 overspent on a £70 million budget and this is likely to rise to £1 million before the end of the year unless it cuts its workload or makes further savings. A hospital spokesman said that ward closures might be needed to stop some elective work. The Christmas closure is expected to be extended and use of agency nurses reduced. The hospital is changing its nursing skill mix, with fewer qualified staff. Northwick Park hospital has treated 20 per cent more cases than planned in the first half of the year and may have to close a ward to stop finther "over-activity". John James, general manager of Parkside health authority, said: Consultants have been working faster than planned and more day surgery has been done." The hospital hopes to attract more feeearning extra-contractual referrals (ECRs). "We might have m cut

the contracts already agreed," Mr

Charing Cross and Westminster hospitals are already £1.6 million overspent. They have had no increase in activity, but ECRs are 25 per cent less than expected and business expected from fundholders is down by 37 per cent.
St Bartholomew's, on the other hand, has attracted 17 per cent more ECRs than expected, mainly due to emergency and commuter work. However, it has treated 10 per cent more patients and is £50,000 overspent. It has already cut 300 posts and may have to close wards at Christmas.

University College Hospital and amount of space we need to meet. £750,000 overspent, may have to reduce activity this year to reduce a deficit, which is partly due to a 21 per cent shortfall in ECRs.

Some hospitals, such as the Royal London Hospital Trust, St

George's, Tooting, and the Royal Free, Hampstead, have stayed within budget. The Royal London puts this down to good belt-tightening, and St George's has woo 30 per cent more ECRs than expected. St Thomas' hospital, which has had severe money problems in past years, is also doing better than most. Although £60,000 overspent and unable to reopen five wards shut last year, it expects to break even by the year's end without cutting its workload.

Scots massacre site goes on sale

A SMALL Scottish estate whose beauty belies its bloody history has been put on sale and is expected to fetch more than £1.5 million. The new owner will have the privilege of using the courtesy title Baron of Ochtertyre. The 205-acre Ochtertyre estate on Tayside, which contains an Adam-style mansioo house, stabling, cottages, two lochs, a 10th century ruined castle and grazing laod, was the scene of a 16th century massacre. A dispute between clans resulted in 160 men, women and children being hurnt to death in the church of Mon-

Ochtertyre passed to the Murrays in 1467 and they retained the lands for more than five centuries uotil 1976. The eldest soo of each generation succeeded his father, an unusual feat for a Scottish family, given the turbulent history of the area.

Ochtertyre house was built between 1784 and 1790. In 1787 Robert Burns stayed on the estate, which covered about 12,000 acres until the 1950s, and in tribute to the beauty of Euphemia Murray he wrote

Battle to control Georgia steps up

From ROBERT SEELY IN TBILISI

FIERCE fighting on the outskirts of the Georgian capital between rebel national guards and forces loyal to President Gamsakhurdia left one man dead and several others wounded yesterday. It was one of the bloodiest clashes in a month-long effort to oust the president.

After the gun battle, several thousand opposition demonstrators spent the afternoon trapped in Tbilisi's main Rustaveli Prospect, bemmed io by two groups supporting Mr Gamsakhurdia. Rival speakers heckled ooe another through megaphones as their opponents jeered and waved their fists.

Crowds began to gather earlier in the day to demand revenge for the attack oo Tengiz Kitovani's national guardsmen who started their withdrawal from the capital oo Thursday night. The clashes took place oo the oorthern side of the Tbilisi Sea, an artificial lake ten miles from the city centre. Several Georgian police officers were also taken captive.

The mood among the protesters was ugly. Standing barely ten feet apart in some places, the confrontation between the two camps threatened to ignite street violence throughout the city. "Gamsakhurdia is going to die to-night," shouted one demonstrator.

The president yesterday apformer East German spy chief, was freed on bail of £85,000 while the courts decide pealed to his supporters to defend him, drawing Georwhether be should go on trial gians from all over the city for treason. British officials confirmed Hurd, the foreign secretary, that the government would no and Gianni De Michelis, the longer oppose outright the possibility that the EC would sised, however, that Britain saw this as unlikely. "If we felt that by doing this we would be damaging the alliance, we wouldn't be doing it," one

With nine weeks to go before the EC summit at Maastricht, the Anglo-Italian paper aims to bridge a gap in what has been one of the most difficult issues in the treaty talks. Since the beginning of the year, one group of states led by France has tried to insert clauses in the treaty which would endow a future EC with a defence policy that would be independent of the existing Atlantic alliance. A rival group led by Britain and The Netherlands has insisted that any integration of European defence should be done within Nato. Yesterday's Anglo-Italian paper leans a little further towards the French insistence on a role for the EC while retaining the Nato

The launch of the Anglo Italian document yesterday is also an attempt to set the agenda on defence in the last phase of the treaty talks and before the Nato summit in Rome in early November.

De Michelis: concerned to retain Nato link

Significantly, Britain has put down its plans in a formal paper. Until now the government has been reluctant to go into detail about its proposals; the running has therefore often been left to the French and Germans and to federalists who have launched visionary plans for union. Britain believes that defence and foreign policy cannot be dealt with in the same community framework as other issues, and that the Franco-German proposals on the issue glossed over the practical difficulties of trying

Walesa seeks UN force in Europe

From Roger Boyes IN WARSAW

PRESIDENT Walesa gave a warning yesterday that ethnic conflicts in Yugoslavia and the rest of the Balkans could disrupt attempts to integrate East and West Europe.

The Polish leader, who holds talks in Cracow this weekend with President Havel of Czechoslovakia and the Hungarian prime minister, Jozsef Antall, believes the three countries should agree a policy on Nato in order to anchor the security of Central Europe. "Nato in turn should work out a new strategy in relation to our countries and thus consolidate its all-European role," he said. Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia all wanted an international armed force in Europe under the auspices of the United Nations," bc went on, "The very existence of such a force would . . . have a calming effect, prevent tragic explosions."

This time last year they were competing for Western investment and jostling fur attention from the European Community. In so far as they had a foreign policy towards each other, it was based un bilateral accords. Now - as all three realise that they are stuck in the EC waiting room for some time, and as the smell of Yugoslav cordite drifts northwards - the emphasis has shifted to collecuve security. The fear is that the seeds of the Yugoslav conflict are also buried in their countries where ethnic minorities are squeezed ugbtly together.

"Tension is growing throughout the region," said Adam Michnik, the Polish commentator and editor, yes-terday. "There are Hungarians in Slovakia and Romania, Turks in Bulgaria, Poles in Lithuania. The communist utopia is being replaced by the ntopia of an ethnically pure "Hungary in particular has problems. Police rape case stirs French fears

Philip Jacobson reports from Paris that the rape of a woman by a policeman with Aids has once again focused France's attention on the conduct of its police force

T be tragic case of a young French woman who was raped by a police officer a few days after he learnt that he had Aids is again focusing the nation's attenuon on the conduct of its police force. The incident comes at a time when six other officers are in court on allegations of organising numerous armed robberies and another has just been charged with shooting dead a young man in questionable circumstances.

The rape of Alexandra F. took place in the central pólice station in Sevran, near Paris, at the end of August, but she discovered only recently that the police-man responsible, Philippe Gagnoo, had tested HIVpositive just before attack-ing ber. Worse, she was not told by the police authorities, nor by the doctors who treated ber, nor by the court that had remanded M Gagnon in custody, instead sbe read about it in the French press.

An Aids test on Alexandra proved negative, but spe-cialists say sbc will have to wait for up to six mooths before learning anything definite. "You can imagine wbat tormeot this poor woman is going through," says ber lawyer. "Day after day between life and death, asking herself what fate will

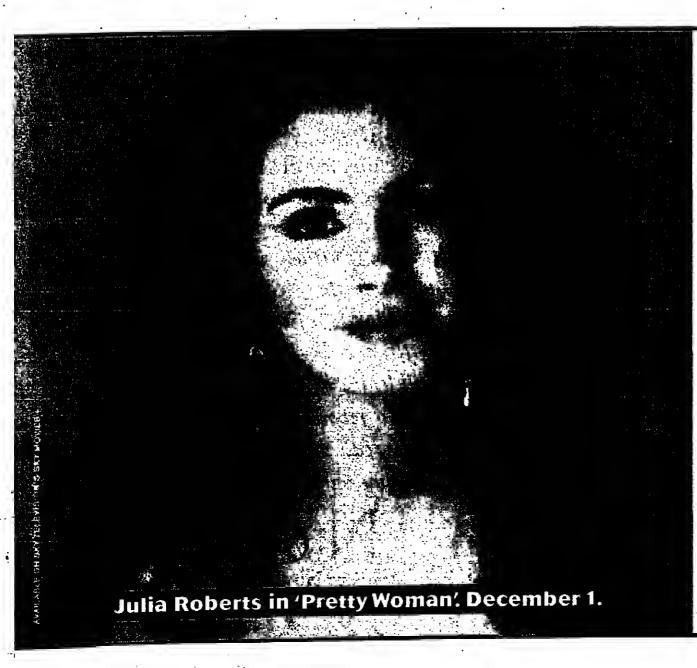

Alexandra, aged 26, agreed to talk to the oewspaper, France-Soir, in the offices of Habeus Corpus, an organisation that investigates complaints of abuse of power by the police. "When l realised what bad happeoed to me, that instead of the worst being over, the horror was just beginning, 1 could barely stand it."

By any standards, Alexan-dra's life up to then had been hard enough: her father was serving a long jail sentence, and she had drifted into drug abuse in the grim suburb where sbe lived, then cured herself of addiction and married only to separate and lose custody of her son. She had been detained overnight by the Sevran police on suspicion of involvement in a theft: just before dawn, having locked up the station, M Gagnon dragged her from a bolding cell into the showers where he raped ber in front of a junior officer.

Two weeks after her ordeal, knowing nothing of what was to come, Alexandra slashed her wrist but she was taken to hospital in time. Since then, sustained and encouraged by Habeus Corpus, she has rallied. preparing herself for the ordeal of M Gagnoo's trial.

"I want to have retrieved my dignity by then, to have a job and somewhere to live with my son. I just pray that l will be strong enough, that I won't have Aids." As for M Gagnon, "I don't wish anything particular for him, since be's going to die

M canwhile, the Paris assize court is considering the damaging affair of the six officers - three belonging to the crack Anti-Bandistry Squad - accused, in a 110-page dossier, of taking part in eight hold-ups in 18 months. They were first arrested more than five years ago. But innumerable obstacles have been put in the way of their final trial. apparently caused by official reluctance to have the matter aired in public.

See what you're missing.

He spits at his teachers, beats up other children and drinks. What he needs is a damned good cuddle.

YOU'D PROBABLY feel sorry for Simon's parents. He looks like a right little handful.

But a good hiding is the last thing children like Simon need.

Every day they already suffer a worse punishment. It's called emotional abuse. Their parents make them feel completely worthless by relentlessly attacking them with insults and put-downs.

To a growing boy or girl the damage can be irreparable.

Imagine what it must feel like. You're 11 years old, and you can't remember ever having any love or affection.

At school you simply don't know how to mix. So you take out your anger and frustration by bullying other children.

You're always in trouble. It's the only way you know of getting some attention.

For once though, you've done some good work. You take it home to show your parents but they laugh at you and call you "thicko" and "ugly." Then they tell you to "---- off" out of their sight.

You go down to the park and sit under that same tree you always do. You've pinched a half-full bottle of scotch from your dad. It helps to numb the pain.

Children like Simon don't want pity. They want help. Maybe you know a child who you suspect is being emotionally abused. Please don't leave the child at risk by just hoping for the best.

And don't be put off because you're worried about splitting up the family. This only happens in very extreme cases.

When a case is reported to us, an NSPCC Child Protection Officer or Local Authority social worker may visit the child's home.

After this, we then make a careful assessment of the family to identify why the parents have been mistreating their child. In numerous cases, they don't even realise they've been doing wrong. A period of counselling may then follow which can involve helping the parents learn how to love and understand their children.

Of course, reporting a case isn't the only way you can help.

We're always crying out for more donations. 80% of our funding relies on the public's generosity.

But, above all, please keep a look out for children like Simon.

They may not look abused. But looks can be cruelly deceiving.

For further information on the work of the NSPCC, or to make a donation, write to: NSPCC, 67 Saffron Hill, London, EC1N 8RS or call 071-242 1626.

Bhopal gas victims choke on compensation deal

ALONG with half a million Bhopal gas victims, Lal Vishwakarma receives 200 ru-pees (less than £5) a month in compensation. He can barely catch his breath to speak: the words he does manage to utter are filled with bitterness.

He said it took his daughter two-and-a-half years to die after inhaling gas from the Union Carbide's pesticide plant, just across the street from his shanty. Her death, because it did not come immediately after the gas leak nearly seven years ago, has brought only 1,500 rupees in compensation. If she had died straight away, he would have received 10,000 rupees. Explaining this bizarre bureaucratic logic leaves Mr Vishwa-karma choking for air.

He is a carpenter by trade, but he has spent the past seven years lying nn a charpoy, summoning the strength once a month to go to the bank for his hand-out. He said he had heard on the radin that the Indian Supreme Cnurt had on Thursday upheld final compensation by Union Carbide of $470 million (£268 million). "Not enough," he said. 'No amount is enough."

The Indian government has been paying interim compen-sation to people like Mr Vishwakarma since April

Christopher Thomas reports from Bhopal that corruption and red tape will drag out payments to the gas disaster victims

1990 but this will stop in another 18 months, leaving a sudden void unless the monumental task of distributing relief is completed by then. That is unlikely since there is no suitable machinery in Bhopal to handle the money and many fear the exercise will be fraught with corruption. State officials in Madhya Pradesh, of which Bhopal is the capital, are beginning to tackle the distribution of the money - assuming that it is nnt frozen in the meantime by further litigation. A range of complex questions have to be resolved; should the mnney be given in lump sum or monthly payments? How much is each egory of each injury worth? Should funds he set aside for the next generation, many of whom are being born with serinus health problems? Union Carbide deposited the $470 million settlement in March 1989 and it has been alised banks since then. The government plans to take nut enough to cover the interim payments it has been making for the past 18 months. Claimants have calculated that there will be enough left to give each victim about 20,000 rupees (£460) - the equivalent of about two years' wages for a typical slum dweller. There are fears that officials will siphon off a good deal of the money. It is commoo knowledge that in Bhopal a passbook entitling a person to compensatioo cao be bought easily from bureaucrats and even genuine victims have to pay bribes to get passbooks. IWENTY-FIVE years after Graham Greene's navel The Comedians comes Comedians II. The setting is again Haiti, but this time the story is unt of the dictators Papa and Baby Doc Duvalier but of real comedians: Mike Hope and Albie Keen of the 1970s BBC comedy series Hope and Keen.

Last Saturday, about to fly home from Florida after entertaining passengers on a Caribbean cruise, they were asked to join another ship in Haiti. They duly flew to Port-au-Prince, landed at 7.15 oo Sunday evening and took a

Heseltine signs deal to protect Antarctic

From HARRY DEBELIUS

BRITAIN was the first nation to sign an agreement here yesterday to leave the Antarctic unspoiled except for scientific research. The accord bans exploration for oil and other minerals for at least 50

The commitment was contained in a protocol that amplifies the 30-year Antarctic Treaty, originally designed to co-ordinate international scientific research. The protocol protects Antarctica's flora and fauna and establishes a procedure to assess the environmental impact of all human activities on the continent. It also regulates marine pollution and waste disposal. About 3,000 people inhabit Antarctica in the summer. Ecologists hailed the agreement, which is expected to take two years to ratify, as an important victory. Michael Heseltine, the environment secretary, said: "This is the protection of the last great wilderness open space. I'm delighted to be here making Curitiba, the capital of the Brazilian farm belt state of Parana, is not only one of Brazil's most liveable cities. It is also a model of how simple methods can be applied to seem-

In the Seventies, when hig was beautiful and Third Wnrld admioistrators borrowed abroad to huild manuments to metropolitan vanity, Senhor Lerner took a modest approach. Instead of an exorbitant underground system, he dedicated lanes to express huses and huilt elegant transfer stations. He banned cars from much of the centre and planted 1.2 million trees, giving precious shade and a touch of green to the standard grey cityscape.

But Senhor Lerner has launched ao ambitious rubbish-collection and recycling programme, known as "Trash that isn't trash", which is unprecedented in Brazil. Seventy per ceot of citizens take part regularly.

T o encourage sanitation in the slams, Curitiba gives away passes or fruit and vegetables in return for rubbish. The system is known as the Greeo Exchange

Senhor Lerner's work has won him kudos and consulting jobs within Brazil and without. He had a hand io plans to resuscitate Caracas and redesign the transit system in San Juan, Puerto Rico. He also helped persuade Fidel Castro oot to sacrifice Havana's art deco architecture to a subway system. Curitiba has won a UN prize for its recycling schemes. Now he is tempted by another challenge. Brazilian mayoral elections are slated for November 1992. and he admits he would not miod moving to Rio de

Lynne Truss reviews the Torvill and Dean Omnibus and finds the secret of all relationships

Happiness is warmth on the ice

ddly, the question "But is it art?" never once crossed one's mind during last night's Omnibus on the ice-skaters Torvill and Dean (BBC1). Glued to the beauty of it all, holding one's breath at the skill, elegance and ingenuity of their astounding performances, one scarcely had sufficient leftover brain power to make the mental note: "Hey, my cat Buster is watching this too; I wonder if he'd like some skates". In such circumstances, the question 'Should I really be watching this?" understandably fails to raise its

Oh, the contradictions of the ice-dance! The warm, soft, colourful bodies amid the cold, hard, white ice; the smoothness of the action, the sharpness of the blades. Forgive the rhapsody, but watching last night's programme, it was difficult to swallow the fact that ice skating had ever been considered solely as a sport.

Suddenly this seemed terribly weird. You mean they got marks out of six for this? You mean that, at one time, there would have sportscaster commentary over their routines? Clearly, the fact that they are Olympic world champions gives them a certain edge (like dramatists winning the laurels in 5th-century Athens play competitions), but in the world of the contemporary arts the notion of point-scoring is surely metaphorical rather than literal. Imag-ine the famous "Three Tenors" concert as a sporting event, with ratings for volume, phrasing and interpretation, ending up with the three blokes ranked one, two and three on a podium. (Actually, that's not such a bad idea. It might get a few things sorted out.)

Apart from a nice opening sequence showing the manufacture of skate-hlades, Boh Portway's film was straightforward. Full-length Torvill and Dean routines were intermixed with interview, and we saw Christopher Dean at work - either choreographing other skating couples, or working with composer Andy Sheppard on the specially commissioned Ice Works (a dance for television which rounded off the show). Sometimes we saw him watching ballet-videos, or doing barre exercises with Jayne Torvill. The general impression was that we were being given privileged access to an ontutored genius, which was all right by me. One's respect for this man's talent grew exponentially as the programme did it with a characteristically perfect one-behind-the-other unison, two bodies moved by a single thought, like weirdly intuitive twins. It is getting to be a habit, perhaps. We did not see them having a cup of tea or going for a walk, but you could imagine that Dean would always be half a yard behind, emulating every move-ment. Torvill must spend half her life experiencing the spooky sensation of someone breathing down her neck. As a child, she may have. learned that Robert Louis Stevenson poem, "I have a little shadow that goes in and out with me".

But it was Dean's achievement as a choreographer that we were invited to assess, from Mack and Mabel, through Bolero, Missing, and Hat Trick to the extraordinary Revolution. This is work that speaks for itself, of course, which is handy because Dean's explications ("It's about Russia") were sometimes a trifle vague. It did seem that the opportunity for broader cultural analysis had been missed. Why does this ice-dancing appeal so directly to one's emotions? Why is it so universally popular? Isn't there an important symbiosis with television? The work is overtly expressive, but what exactly does it express?

The great appeal of Torvill and Dean, perhaps, is the rather obvious one that their drama must always ultimately boil down to Relationships - in common with so much else on television. Bolero is about love, bonding shared tragedy, and matching mauve fairy-tale costumes. Ice skating, especially in pairs, is quite limited, really, two people, who will fall over if they stop moving, travel along side by side, basically holding each other np.

Torvill and Dean make a virtue of the limitations, stressing the physical intimacy, the dependence, and the complete excluding-all-others mutual involvement. They pull apart, they are drawn together, they swap sides, swap hats, pull each other along by the leg, but they are made for one another, and they cannot let go.

ean recently took the risk of choreographing this rather negative obno-not-you-again ver-sion of the ice-dancers' destiny. Unsurprisingly, the result was not entirely welcomed by misty-eyed lovers of Bolero.

Revolution (danced to the old Beatles number of the same name) is tense and aggressive; they block each other's blows, grab each other's wrists, strut and struggle and narrow their eyes. They are terribly fed up. It might be entitled Bolero, Five Years Later or Watere's the Fun, Now that We've Finished Grouting . the Bathroom?".

There seemed to be a great deal of aggressive marital strife on television this week: the searing hreak-up of James and Charity in The Men's Room (BBC1); the bowling-contest in Two Point Four Children (BBC1), in which the unfortunately-named Bill and Ben transformed a rare night out into a foaming battle of the sea mon-sters; Rik Mayall and Adrian Edmondson in Bottom (BBC2) going mad with quasi-marital claustrophobia ("What am I going to feed the children?"); and Sue Sullivan in Brookside (Channel 4) paying a rather heavy penalty for adultery - being tipped, baby and all, from a high roof.

Disenchantment was rife. But there was nothing so expressive, or scary, as Torvill and Dean presending, with every fibre of their being, to loathe one another. Look, she's trying to hit him. It's enough to make you weep. I mean, for heavens' sake, they used to seem so happy.

Tale of Country folk

ROCK

Big Country Town & Country

HAVING reached a creative impasse and suffered grievous financial losses on their 1988 Moscow adventure to promote the Peace in our Time album, Big Country were ready to throw in the towel. In the event, only drummer Mark Brzezicki quit. Nevertheless, the group has turned a new page with their latest album, No Place Like Home, a radical and inspired departure from the galloping rhythms and skirling guitar sounds of old.

Even so, Big Country remain a band painfully out of joint with the times. Dominated by the thoughtful, honourable and downto-earth personality of singer and guitarist Stuart Adamson, they have neither the "dangerous" attitude to compete with such young turks as Guns N' Roses or the lofty pretensions of contem-poraries like Simple Minds. If anything, their relationship with their audience is akin to the easy and cosy rapport of a long-established folk act, and indeed halfway through this, the first of a five-night residency, Adamson strapped on an acoustic guitar and asked for requests. The result was an unaccompanied version of Broken Heart (Thirteen Valleys)" with the crowd enthusiastically adding their football-chant vocalese to the chorus.

However, there is no folk act that gets the kind of response which greeted the opening salvo of "We're Not in Kansas", "King of Emotion" and "Look Away". It looked as if the dance floor had been turned into a giant trampoline, such was the mass of bodies bouncing at the front.

The new material was greeted with more restraint, but the bluesy "Republican Party Reptile" and the country-tinged ballad "Ships" nevertheless dovetailed surprisingly smoothly into the structure of the set. The honky-tonk piano, mandolin and mellow sentiments "Beautiful People" sat less comfortably in the mix, and an old song about the aftermath of a nuclear holocaust, "Winter Sky", seemed a perversely dated choice, both musically and topically. Bet-ter by far was the taut menace of wah-wah soloing from Adamson.

The old standbys, "Chance" and "In a Big Country" gave way to encores including an emotional reading of Neil Young's epic "Rocking in the Free World" and an ill-advised stab at Muddy Waters's cock-of-the-roost anthem Mannish Boy".

"The Hostage Speaks", with its picaresque lyric and haunting

DAVID SINCLAIR

CONCERT Allegri Quartet Purcell Room

JAMES MacMillan's Tuircadh, given its London premiere by the Allegri Quartet and the clarinettist lames Campbell, is that rare animal in contemporary music: a contemplative, sad, mostly slow piece which hits its intended emotional spot exactly. The premise for its inclusion in this concert, as in all of this short series, was the inspiration of Mozart, whose Clarinet Quintet the same players gave after the interval. Yet the world of Mac-Millan's work shares little with that of Mozart's beyond the instrumentation.

For one thing, not a note of Tuireadh, which was composed in memory of the victims of the Piper Alpha disaster, exists as decoration. Instead, MacMillan has written an essay whose eloquence derives from the instruments' unity and immediate reaction with each other, rather than from diversity within the texture or conflict. The means are lean and the scene is set with staggering simplicity: a single, sustained note on the clarinet starting from silence and expanding into a fortissimo of utter anguish. Then the strings take their turn at another pitch, this time modulating it agonisingly through semitone steps, and thus creating constantly changing but narrow clusters of sound. They congregate again on a tremolando. MacMillan's use of such basic devices could have turned his piece into mere sound-effect. But one was able easily to imagine the sounds, and the flavour, of the mysterious, intuitive keenings which, the composer's note told us, apparently arose spontaneously when a group of mourners visited the site of the tragedy. From this an ceric chorale emerges; then MacMillan, in a structure which progresses in natural-sounding breath spans, completes the confusing melange of bereavement's emotions with stuttering, angry passages. These are sometimes combined with high-pitched clarinet arabesques.

Finally, the viola's plaintive sigh, a descending semitone, suggests the beginnings of a coming to terms with grief. Nevertheless that grief, deep and harrowing, still exists. If such description cannot possibly do this immensely moving work justice, this performance - several degrees more con-centrated than that of Haydn's String Quartet, Op 76 No 5, which preceded it - most certainly did.

A Swell Party Vaudeville

THIS is the sort of show that was inevitable in the centenary year of Cole Porter's whose forte was the deft lyric, hirth. Two actors, two actresses and two pianists assemble on a black forestage from which spindly black stairs lead to a black platform.

One of them describes the essentials of the composer's life, trying his best to ensure that the songs that interrupt him flow naturally from his narrative. Thus a few sentences about Porter's insom-niae worries lead first to "Night and Day", then to "In the Still of the Night". Similarly, a first trip to France is followed by "I Love Paris" and "You Don't Know Paree", and a later, sadder one by "Who Said Gay Paree?". Everyone wears discreet evening dress and sips cham-parne, lots of it.

Most of the time, David Gilmore's production follows the genre's rules, some might say its cliches. Why not? Anne. Wood substituted for the sick Maria Friedman last night; but she proved no less melodious than Angela Richards, David Kernan, Nickolas Grace and the singing pianist, Martin Smith.

There were times when I wondered if all of them, Smith honourably excepted, could use more beef; but then Porter was, so to speak, less rare steak than cold consommé with dry sherry added. Their casual good humour sorted well enough with a composer the wry melody, the debonair celebration of life's sophisticated pleasures.

Yet there are differences from the usual concert compendium, though whether they are bold or perverse depends on your taste. Most of the well-known songs are there, from "Anything Goes" to "Just One of Those Things"; hut they sometimes get shorter shrift than ones that I, at least, had never hummed. For example, much is made of "Love for Sale" ("who's prepared to pay the price for a trip to paradise?"), presumably because the show's creators, John Kane and David Kernan, think it reflects Porter's homosexual-ity and habits of slumming.

Justice is similarly done to a superb number aboot Manhattan from the show Red, Hot and Blue ("I'm deserted, I'm depressed, in my regal eagle's nest, in the depths of the ninetieth floor"). Yet extracts from Kiss Me Kate pass in a flash, and "You're the Top", "Well Did You Evah!", "Let's Fall in Love" and "It's

Our attitude to sex is determined by inherited hypocrisy not true morality

Public soliciting by prosti-tutes is illegal. So is the reciprocal practice of kerbcrawling. Thus does the law try to turn off both the supply and the demand for this least respectable of trades. It does so on the principle that prostitution is wrong, hut it achieves only the lesser result of making prostitution more difficult, driving it into ever more sordid corners. This is typical of the muddle public policy gets into in Britain when it tries to regulate anything to do with sex. It has not reduced prostitution, nor saved prosulutes, nor improved the moral climate.

Whether there should be any such thing as "public morality" will be one of the growing debates of the 1990s. The broad proposition is at first attractive, almost obvious: society needs "stanpublic morality begins to be contentious that the idea starts to collapse under its own weight. Who is to decide its terms? How is it to be upheld, or, if broken, enforced?

And should this include, even rely upon, public shaming of well-known people if they infringe? Should public figures be expected to behave better than anybody else? And what does "better" mean? The allegation of kerb-crawling which precipitated the resignation of the Director tions, Sir Allan Green, like the allegation of homosexuality which led to the resignation of Lord Dervaird from the Scottish judiciary last year, brings these issues into the open. That public morality should still claim such a blood tribute from its victims though nobody can quite remem-ber wby - is a sign that its sands have finally run out.

It is ignorant to hlame the muddle on Judaeo-Christian morality, or — on the opposite tack — to maintain that Judaeo-Christian morality is under threat and must be defended. The blame cannot be pinned on Jews and Christians so easily, nor do they necessarily have such a stake in the status quo. If any are guilty it is the Victorians, for it was their muddle about sex which laid the foundation for the present one, including the prostitution laws. And the cardinal principle of the Victorian code was not morality, but respectability.

The totem of respectability is the basis of British moral hypocrisy, and there is no praise of hypocrisy in the Bible. Respectability and its obverse, hypocrisy, are the fuel of the sexual pruri-ence, which sells millions of tabloid newspapers and introduces an ache of guilt into millions of sexual relationships of shining purity. Yet the demands of respectability are less related to morality, even to sexuality, than to class. It was a method of social control: of the lower orders by the upper, of women by men, of the unusual by the average. Deification of respectability was a rotten basis for a public sexual morality. The first step in the search for a healthy morality of sexual conduct has to be the rejection of respectability as the touchstone. Space would then exist for a return to true Judaeo-Christian morality. But it is no longer appropriate, if it ever was, to think of imposing this by law, or even by public pressure and the pillorying of infringers in the public stocks. If it has any appeal, that must be on its merits. Stripped of Victorian distortions, the sterling merits of this morality would surprise many people.

Far from an enemy of sex, the Judaeo-Christian sexual code is a guide to getting the best out of sex. Before HIV was ever heard of, it was a code for "safe sex", sex which harms nobody, which coments relationships, cultivates love, builds moral maturity and secures family life for children. (It also prevents transmission of disease.) That sex needs such a code is not surprising. Sexual anarchy risks damage to people at their

> Neither in the old sense nor the new, however, can safe sex be imposed by law. The majority of the population no longer subscribes to the view that Old and New Testament teaching, on sex or anything else, is divinely inspired. Those who still believe that it is the Word of God should sisting that their views be compulsory, even if the were in their hands. For when this degree of secularisation is reached, there is little alternative but to privatise sexual morality, accepting that henceforth it can be only a matter of individual choice, albeit also a suitable matter for unabashed debate. This must also mean leaving people free to hurt themselves or each other by their mistakes. Public morality - at least in the sense of a set of restrictions - can only be applied by law in those areas where a public good, such as the protection of children, approach. The overriding principle of Judaco-Christian morality, before it enters into the wbo-does-whatto-whom of sexuality, has to be 'Judge not, lest ye be judged". Nothing starting anywhere else can be called Christian. Such a starting point would be immensely attractive to a society looking for sexual first principles. It would relax the entire debate. It would not take ethics out of sex, but it would sweep away condemnation, hlackmail, bypocrisy, higotry, guilt and all the unhealthy interest in other people's sexual conduct which regularly disfigures public life. Only when we admit the way people are can we discuss how they ought to be.

Pressure for an independent review of verdicts is irresistible, says David Pannick equitting Catsmest Pirbright in P.G. Wodehouse's The Mating Season, Esmond the Magistrate concludes:

"If there's one thing that gives me the pip, it's a miscarriage of justice." That Douglas Hurd, former home secretary and now foreign secretary, is similarly aggravated by wrongful convictions will considerably advance the cause of reform of the criminal

On Wednesday, Mr Hurd ap-peared before the enquiry under Sir John May into the miscarriages of ustice which led to the imprisonment of the Guildford Four and the Magnire Seven. In a re-freshing display of open govern-ment, Mr Hurd gave the enquiry his opinion of the process by which the home secretary has power under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 to refer cases to the Court of Appeal for reconsideration. His conclusion is that present procedures are "inad-equate" to secure justice. He expressed support for the creation of an independent body with the resources to enquire into allega-tions of wrongful convictions, and with the power to send cases back to the Court of Appeal.

No sensible person would deny that every day juries up and down the land acquit the guilty. So there is no shame in lawyers recognising that at least occasionally, twelve fallible men and women, acting in good faith and trying their hardest to be fair, will convict the innocent. Once that less than shocking admission is made, the only question is what procedures should be adopted by the criminal justice system to rectify such errors.

The present system is obviously not working. The cases of the Guildford Four, the Magnires and the Birmingham Six have undoubtedly done serious damage to the reputation of the legal system and to the confidence of those who work within it. More shocks will be felt in the months to come. Winston Silcott is no hero, but he cannot remain imprisoned much longer for the murder of PC Blakelock at Broadwater Farm in the absence of any reliable evidence against him. The home secretary, Kenneth Baker, has referred to the Court of Appeal his case and the equally troubling case of Indith Ward, who was jailed for the M62 coach bombing in 1974.

Contrary to popular belief, most lawyers and judges are anxious than justice be done. How could it he they are acking themselves.

be, they are asking themselves, that for so many years defendants not guilty of the serious crimes with which they were charged were left to rot in prison? If mis-takes were made in a series of such high-profile cases, how many miscarriages of justice have occurred in trials that were not so stand that the majesty of the legal system provides a bopelessly inefficient and imprecise process for establishing the truth. The theatrical tradition of cross-examination, the complex rules about admissible evidence, and the right of the are all barriers to discovering what actually occurred.

Judges who have conducted public enquiries into matters as diverse as the Brixton riots and the Hillsborough disaster have not impeded their investigations by adopting the procedures that hamper the courts. They choose much more flexible methods of o it is hardly surprising that the Court of Appeal, con-strained as it is by legal pro-cedures, has proved a less than ideal forum for unravelling mis-carriages of justice. The judges have neither the training, the experience, the resources nor the assistance necessary to uncover the facts.

A coalition of Douglas Hurd, the Bar Council, Justice, the Labour party, Lord Scarman and the Home Affairs Select Committee of the House of Commons might be favour of the speedy creation of an independent body to assess alleged miscarriages of justice. Some members of the judiciary, but a declining number, would resist the appointment of any lay commirtee, which they would consider a threat to their jurisdiction. But Mr Baker would probably find that most judges, concerned about the reputation of the system, understand that reform is not a criticism of their performance but a recognition that those who are skilled in deciding the law are not best equipped to investigate the mistakes made by juries.

After all, the creation of the Court of Criminal Appeal in 1907 was the result of the miscarriage of justice by which Alfred Reck served five years in prison for an offence he had not committed. The public comments of Douglas Hurd, based on his experience of considering recent miscarriages of justice as home secretary, make it criminal for there to be any further delay in implementing reform.

Peter looks west once more

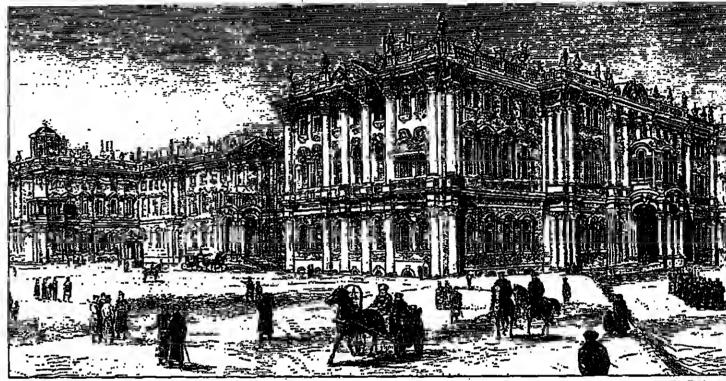

Charles Bremner asks if the historic city on the Neva can be returned to its former glory

ld ghosts are stalking St Petersburg this autumn. They are the same ghosts that inhabited the stately chambers and boulevards of Russia's old capital threequarters of a century ago. The city is suffused with bope and fear, exhilaration and despair, just as it was when the Bolshevik experiment was hatching. The mixed mood is as palpable as the chill winds now streaming off the Baltic and the morning sun that illuminates the breathtaking sweep of arch and colonnade, the autumntinged gardens and the green-andwhite glory of the Winter Palace.

Like the rest of Russia, but perhaps more intensely because of its history as the old capital and guardian of Russian culture, Peter's city is once again waiting with some dread. This week it formally cast off the name of Lenin, and now it is purging itself of the dozens of street and district names and the 1917 October revolution. It is an exercise that the financially pressed town hall of Mayor Anatoly Sobchak believes is worth every kopek of the 150 million roubles they expect it to cost.

The cruiser Aurora, which fired the first revolutionary volley is still moored on the Neva, and a red marble plaque still testifies the city's devotion to Lenin. But the grey pall of communism has lifted. Peter's red, white and sky blue tricolour flies from almost every palace, while the hammer and sickle is invisible except as an irrelevant symbol on the evocative black tsarist tunics of the sailors one sees marching past the husts of Gogol and Lermontov into the imperial admiralty.

But seven weeks after the failed coup in Moscow, jubilation is giving way to fear about inflation, rationing and surviving a winter of food shortages which are al-

That melancholy sense of being left behind at the start of the jazz age, of wasting seven decades in needless sacrifice, is the refrain of almost every conversation. re live in an age of specialisation, and that means an age of jargon. A couple of centuries ago, an intelligent person could make a shot at understanding what pro-fessionals in other fields were talking about. But the day of the universal man, the Renaissance man, Leonardo or Goetbe or Coleridge, has gone. Today we occupy enclosed sects, with esoteric jargons.

There is nobody alive, not the most acute philosopher or the most learned lexicographer, who has a hope of understanding all the languages of the warring sects. Computer programmer speaks to computer programmer, and educationist calls to educationist, and for all it means to those standing outside the business, they might be dinosaurs bellowing at each other across Neolithic swamps. It used to be supposed that sociologists used the worst gobbledegook, but they have contributed some of their shiniest jargon to our general stock of language (charisma, Protestant ethic, and so on).

Originally, jargon simply meant the inarticulate twittering of birds. Chaucer makes the merchant in The Canterbury Tales speak of January as being as fuli of jargon as a spotted magpie. Media people twitter jargon as badly as the rest of them. We get into the babit of repeating a catchphrase until it drives our readers berserk, and we need a good friend to draw our attention gently to the it is improbable that so many irritant. "Journo" and "boo-word" are two on which my needle has got stuck at present. Jargon comes in many sbapes. But one definition of it is using words in a way that nobody outside one's own sect or speciality would ever dream of using them. The jargon of other trades is irritating, because it makes us outsiders feel patronised.

It is a jolly irony that just about the worst modern jargonauts are those whose specialities are language itself and literature. The jargon of deconstruction and post-structuralism is a jungle of aporia into which profane outsiders penetrate at their peril, with Derrida and Barthes lurking in impenetrable undergrowth, and warring forces of signification roaring in the text. The difference between difference and difference is ambiguous and untranslatable

One way out of the aporia for those outside the literary departments of universities, those who are not true believers, is the philistine method of Alexander with the Gordian knot. We could cut out the complexities of deconstruction and post-structuralism by dismissing them as meaningless, full of sophistry and illusion, signifying nothing. It is true that there is pseudery and nonsense around in English departments, just as there is in all departments of life. All intellectual heroes have feet of clay, which their fans ignore in the enthusiasm of the cult. But clever men and women would believe in complete nonsense for so long. In the same way, behind the rebarbative jargon of sociology, even the dreaded Talcott Parsons has important points to make about the way we live. Behind the jargon of deconstruction, they have developed interesting new ways of looking at texts. Deconstruction is similar in meaning to analysis, which literally means "undoing". It focuses on rhetoric, the different levels of meaning in a text, and the divisions which lie at the heart of meaning itself. But when Derrida makes bis well-known proposition, "Il n'y a rien hors du texte" — that is, one cannot evaluate, criticise, or construc a meaning for a text by reference to anything external to it - be is talking nonsense. History, biography, religion, the change of meaning in words, and many other factors are useful in understanding a text. To dismiss them all as irrelevant is characteristic arrogance of enthusiasts. We need to understand what critical theorists are up to, because it is important, in spite of their jargon and arrogance. A good place to start for the plain man is with J.A. Cuddon's A Dictionary of Literary Terms and Literary Theory, which is just out in its third edition. Its size confirms that literary criticism has one of the largest jargons. Its generous humanity helps you to tell your differance from your difference, without saying that all previous critics

For the benefit of Mr Major

A FRESH insight into the colour-ful career of John Major's theatri-cal father is exciting the prime minister's family this weekend. Some time ago Terry Major-Ball, the prime minister's brother, appealed for information about the career of their father, with the thought of writing a biography. Now a London bookshop has turned up an unknown poster of nearly 80 years ago, which it plans to present to the prime minister.

The poster, dated June 8, 1914, lists Tom and Kitty Major as the third act in a variety night at the Argyle Theatre of Varieties, which was flattened during a second world war bombing raid.

David Drummond, owner of the London specialist bookshop Pleasures of Past Times, says: "It must have been tucked in the back of the drawer about 15 years ago when no one had heard of John Major, It's an extraordinary find." The prime minister's brother Terry agrees. "It's a fascinating discovery. I have done extensive research on our family history and have not found any such posters. I hope after people read about this others may turn up. I know John will be excited; I keep him in touch with all my research." Major's mother, Gwen, a dancer regularly appeared in Tom and Kitty's act as a a dancer. Kitty died in 1928, and Gwen and Tom were married the following year. But as ever in politics, there are strings attached. The bookshop which found the poster is threatened with closure, crippled by high rents and the business rate element of the poll tax. Drummond is writing to John Major about the find - and hopes at the same time to enlist the prime minister's aid over the plight of his and other bookshops in Cecil Court, the famous London passageway.

PRESIDENT GORBACHEV has done rather well out of the failed August coup. Not only did he get his old job back, but he has now picked up $500,000 for writing an account of his three-day stay in the Crimean dachau under house arrest. That works out at $1,157 for every minute he was there. Mike Tyson and Frank Sinatra probably earn faster, but this puts the presi-dent in an elite league. The book, to be called August Coup, has been bought by HarperCollins, and the 74-page account will appear "by the end of the month". The book promises to be grip-ping - providing, says Peter Frank of Essex University, that a fine writer is lined up to assist with the words. Gorbachev, for all his qual-ities is no Leo Tolstoy. LITTLE-KNOWN secrets of the House of Commons wartime role are due to be unveiled next week at an exhibition to mark the 50th anniversary of the bombing of perliament.

The exhibition, at the Museum of London, will reunite the surviving members of Westminster's very own Dad's Army, the parliamentary home guard unit, and will detail the plans, never realised, to evacuate both houses to Stratfordupon-Avon, where the Commons would bave debated in the Royal Shakespere Theatre and the Lords in the conference hall.

Somerset de Chair, now aged 80, who as an MP urged Winston Churchill in 1941 to bold an architectural competition for the restoration of the Commons chamber, says: "I forced a division, but I was the only vote in favour, with about 330 against. The debate took place in the Lords, which was virtually undamaged. Churchill was determined that Sir Giles Gilbert Scott should carry it out."

ON THE EVE of the Tory party conference, one of the last surviv ing figures of the Thatcher era in Tory central office has decided to quit. As predicted here four months ago. Christine Wall, who was hand-picked by Mrs Thatcher to head the press office and act as her eyes and ears in Central Office. is resigning for a job in industry.

Oh dear London Buses' latest advertising campaign rails - quite rightly - against selfish motorists who park their cars in bus lanes. Unfortunately the advert shows a 149 bus alongside a bus-stop which clearly says "Camden Town". The advert then accuses the motorist parked in front of the bus of disrupting the lives of 61 local people. But the 149 route runs from Enfield to Mansion House and doesn't go anywhere near Cam-den. "We admit that it was staged as it's terribly difficult to get real shots of that kind of incident," says a spokesman. A photographic expert employed stronger words: "No question about it — the picture is a classic passe up job." A complaint to the Advertising Standards Authority cannot be far away.

BR'S BLIGHTED LINK

John Major's decisioo to postpone the electioo until oext year is already devastating Whitehall with "decision blight". Nowhere is this more glaring than over the high-speed rail link from London to the Channel tunnel. Ministers who like to portray British government as a well-oiled machine compared with the inert regimes of Italy and Spain should hang their heads in shame.

Despite knowing from the start that the Channel tunnel project would be riddled with public-sector implications including overt or covert subsidies, ministers find themselves crippled with indecision whenever called upon to say yes or oo, whether to a grant or a planning permission. Malcolm Rifkind at transport and Michael Heseltine at environment are patently praying for new jobs rather than face the hostility of Kent, the railway, the tunnel interests and the Treasury. Never have so many been held to ransom by the funk of so few.

The first fault lies with Margaret Thatcher's notorious 1987 Channel Tunnel act and all those who willed it through cabinet. It contained clauses preventing public subsidy for capital and operating costs, for tunnel, rail link and terminals. The traveller who bought a ticket for Paris at King's Cross or Waterloo was to be conveyed to his destination without a penny of taxpayers' money. to speed him on the way. No minister at the time believed any of this, as the French derisively pointed out. The chickens have now come home to roost.

There has always been a simple way out: to treat the high-speed link as a new bit of commuter railway to be leased to grateful tunnel users. Thus could the government make sure a route was declared, terminibuilt and British industry and its railways covered in the same glory now beckoning the French. This idea has been round Whitehall for four years without anybody daring to bring it to fruition.

The latest sign of the fiasco is at Ashford. Prefab huts have had to be proposed because nobody can say from which pot should come the money (extravagantly put at £188 million) that BR needs for a proper station. It is already too late to have a new station in time for the first trains in June 1993. The government, recognising that the dogma behind clause 42 of the 1987 act is now untenable, should step in with specific loans or grants to enable the station to be built as soon as possible.

The 1987 act did not preclude public expenditure of £68 million for extensions to the south Kent motorway network to improve roads to the tunnel terminals, which made nonsense of the no-subsidy rule. Why public policy should favour road rather than rail travel in this way was never explained. Such was the government's antirail prejudice that it would neither charge for use of the roads, thus equalising competition with rail, nor subsidise rail, equalising competition with the roads.

The same muddle applies to the tunnel's direct competitors, ferries and airports, who continue to enjoy millions of pounds in duty-free subsidies not permitted the railways. Nor did the 1987 act stop subsidy officially public support for London commuter services - for the upgrading of the existing rail routes in Kent, costing £1.5 billion, in preparation for the tunnel's opening before the high-speed link is built.

British Rail has now submitted its "preferred route" for the new railway to the government to be considered by the cabinet in the next few weeks. Battle is already joined between Mr Rifkind and Mr Heseltine over these routes, between the King's Cross and Stratford East termini respectively. The chief difference between them is that the BR-Rifkind-King's Cross route is the most central, the most sensible, the most easily cross-subsidised and the most likely to be built. The chief virtue of the Stratford route is that it is as yet unplanned and unsafeguarded. It thus offers everybody a golden opportunity to hesitate and delay beyond an election. Such are among the real costs of Mr Major's election decision.

JAPAN'S POLITICAL MYSTERIES

If few Westerners understand Japan, fewer still will understand the unexpected resignation of its prime minister, Toshiki Kaifu. The country takes its place at the top table at . all international organisations, as the wealthiest, second most powerful industrial democracy in the world. Increasingly, Japan is regarded as part of "the West". It is oot. Its byzantine politics reflect a society still largely unchanged by Western ideas and values.

The resignation oo Thursday of Ryutaro Hashimoto, the finance minister, revealed long-standing acceptance of intrigue and business practices incomprehensible elsewhere. The decision yesterday by the prime minister oot to resist the intense pressure on him from party elders to step down next month underlines again the veiled nature of power in Japan's factional democracy.

Mr Kaifu has been forced out of office after only two years, despite domestic popularity and a good recovery of his Liberal Democratic Party from embarrassing scandals that toppled his two predecessors. He was chosen as a "Mr Clean" who was a compromise choice from the smallest of the five main factions. Using his popularity, he was emboldened to tackle the international issues that were isolating

Japan among its friends. Foreign policy for Mr Kaifu, as for most of his predecessors, was essentially a means to huff up his domestic image. This did not protect him from the failure of the package of domestic political reforms, forced on the reluctant party by the Recruit scandal. When it failed to win approval, the party heaved a sigh of relief and deserted him. The machine, it seems, has won. His successor will probably come from a trio of powerful men behind the scenes: Kiichi Miyazawa and Michio Watanabe, former finance ministers, or Hiroshi Mitsuzuka, a former trade minister. None is an outstanding politician. And none is likely to alter the central thrust of Japanese policy. .

In the West a new leader emerges from the rough-and-tumble of confrontational politics, and seeks to establish his own profile and line. In Japan politics works by consensus. No single politician can give a response until all views have been solicited - as the West has found to its exasperation. More importantly, politicians in Japan do not make policy. This is drawn up by bureaucrats, senior civil servants who are usually well-educated, well-travelled, versed in Western ways and able to prepare briefing

Surely the time has come for a bit of straight thinking. Allan Green is a top-class DPP. England needs him and his kindly wisdom in these difficult times. Let everyone who knows the quality of his work and the quality of his humanity rise up and demand that his resignation be withdrawn.

It would be a heartening com-mentary on the English people at the end of the 20th century if Allan Green were restored to his office by acclaim.

A 'grand debate' urged to resolve Britain's doubts on future role in Europe

From Lord Harris of High Cross and others

Sir, Whatever may be thought to be the "correct" balance between concessions and standing firm in the negotiations leading up to the Maastricht conference, the dominant pressures on the government will be to concede too much, in the hope of minimising friction with our European partners in the run-up to a general election in the new year.

The fiasco of the short-lived Dutch draft treaty (report and leading article, October I) illustrates how far the historic issue of Enrope's fixure can become the plaything of cynical compromises struck as by-products of short-term, domestic pressures, to the neglect of enduring constitutional, economic and political principles. Although the prime minister did well to help see off the Dutch draft, a return to the Luxembourg version provides no comfort. The removal of the word "federal" would do nothing to expunge centralising ambitions from the minds of many participants whose domestic politics are governed by coalitions committed in varying degree to corporatism, co-determination and other collectivist fancies. Would not the strengthening of the Commission and the Euro-Parliament at the expense of the Council of Ministers, and the wholesale extension of qualified majority voting far beyond the single market, increasingly supplant Westminster and threaten to undo the British liberalisation of the 1980s, which

East than in Western Europe? If economic union led to a single European money would that not effectively mean a single European chancellor of the exchequer?

These and many other centralising tendencies are supported by some European partners, perhaps less from conviction than in contemplation of massive subsidies provided by the Community to accommodate their less-developed economies to the rigours of monetary union and the costs of uniform minimum wages, welfare, working conditions and so on. Would not all this in turn raise prohibitive barriers against new members from Eastern Europe?

In defence and foreign policy, majority voting would inevitably commit Britain to action — or inaction — at the behest of often petty European calculations that ignored Britain's wider interests. Must we not ensure that our North Atlantic and Commonwealth commitments remain of paramount concern?

Do the British people want all -or much - of this? Does support for Europe in opinion polls mean enthusiasm for any old - or new -Europe? How many fully under-stand what is at stake? Should not party leaders want to know what voters really think on these momentous issues? Do they not need to know, before they contemplate signing solemn treaties in the name of the British people?

There is no secret that both divided on this issue in Parliament, present or potential, in the country. party managers. The Liberal Democrats alone are committed to some vision of European federalism, but might not even they have some reservations? It may serve the immediate cause of party leaders to damp down fear of exposing or exacerbating internal divisions. But what about the larger, permanent cause of democracy? If any government moves further or faster towards political and economic union than informed opinion would currently welcome, it can hardly rely on party reckoning, should things turn out less happily than uncritical federalists now hope. Before conceding or withholding approval of any binding commitment at Maastricht in eight weeks' time, HM government needs some assurance that its fateful decision will have the informed support of the British people. It simply will not do to negotiate in secret and then rely on the whips to force the loyalty to head off an embittered

liament What is urgently required is a much more open, wide-ranging public debate. Some of us believe the best focus would be a campaign for a referendum on this issue, but that of course raises such difficulties as phrasing the question and timing a decision. The undersigned would therefore welcome a "grand debate" has had much more influence in the Conservative and Labour parties are on Britain's future in Europe and beyood, to be conducted without the as no doubt are their supporters, inhibition so convenient to myopic

As a start we urge editors, radio and television producers to give more space and time to airing the issues and encouraging the full expression of rival opinions. A lesson we would commend to voters discussion on the European issue for from the successful campaign against Sunday trading is that between elections MPs' mailbags are the most sensitive targets for registering public attitudes on specific issues. Let constitueots make their views known to their members, who in turn should be asked to declare where they stand. We believe there are few issues of more profound historic and everyday practical import than the good governance of Britain and its future relations with all nations of Europe

Hindsight on the ethics of saturation bombing

From Sir Frederic Bennett

Sir, Mr William Hetherington (October 3) is quite right to point out that it is not only Germans who are disturbed by the proposals to erect a statue to "Bomber" Harris.

There were many serving in the forces during the last war, including bumbly myself, who felt unhappy about saturation bombing of civilian populations, whichever contestants indulged in it.

Let us ask ourselves what would be the reaction today of the average Briton if he or she were to read that the Germans proposed to erect a new memorial, now, in Berlin, bonouring the senior Luftwaffe officer responsible for ordering the bombing of Coventry.

Yours etc., F. M. BENNETT, 2 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn, WC2.

From Mr Arthur Davis Sir, Cities and citizens have been in the front line of total war at least since the aerial bombardments of China by Japan and of Guernica by the Germans in the thirties. I doubt if the citizens of Dresden would have preferred to change places with the inhabitants of Leningrad, the Warsaw ghetto, or Oradour-sur-Glane. Whether great military or other exploits should be memorialised, whether they should be memorialised in public statuary, whether they should be memorialised in statues of actual people - these are the questions that should give the proponents of the "Bomber" Harris scheme pause, particularly in the light of the fate that has recently befallen a number of public personalised monuments in eastern Europe and other parts of the former Soviet "empire". Yours faithfully, ARTHUR DAVIS, 14 Queens Gate Gardens, SW7.

From Dr H. G. Muller Sir, I read with disbelief and disgust that a monument is to be erected to "Bomber" Harris. Certainly, a public remembrance to the very brave British airmen is long overdue, so long as the names of the instigators of the barbarity are not mentioned.

I survived the air raids on Cologne as a teenager. Yours faithfully. H. G. MULLER. 10 Tredgold Crescent, Bramhope, Leeds, West Yorkshire. October 3.

From Mrs R. N. Harrison

Sir, The narrow arguments about a memorial to Sir Arthur Harris illustrate a national embarrassment is acceptable to have young men exult in the sight of enemies going down in flames, but not to acknowledge the deaths of Bomber Command aircrew doing what was their duty in wartime.

The lack of official recognition of the unequalled courage of the young' men who, with the country's blessing, took the war back to the enemy cruelly diminishes the self-sacrifice of those who died. No medal, no annual service but periodic reassess-ments, with hindsight, of Bomber Command's wartime role — these, demonstrate the vation's desire to appear always to defend, never to

Yours faithfully, NANCY HARRISON, The Long Acre, Silver Street,

From Professor Emeritus

Sir, From January 1943 until the From Mr John A. Alkinson middle of 1944, I was a medical Sir. I have been in correspondent officer in RAF Bomber Command Civilians often stopped me in the streets of London and thanked me for "what you are doing". (As I generally wore a raincoat or great-coat they failed to appreciate that I was merely a medical officer.) None ever questioned or criticised the bombing campaign.

In the closing weeks of the war, when I was with the RAF formation that helped to liberate Copenhagen, I met a number of English-speaking Wehrmacht and Luftwaffe officers. Several made the point that the first serious doubts they had about the nutcome of the war came when, on leave, they saw the devastation caused by RAF attacks on their homeland, until then regarded as inviolate.

There has, I believe, been a persistent failure to recognise the effect the RAF's bombing campaign had on the morale of the British and their enemies. The erection of a statue to Harris would be fitting recognition, albeit belated, to the thousands of aircrew who lost their lives in bringing home to the enemy the full horror of the aerial warfare which they started. Yours faithfully.

J. K. RUSSELL, Newlands, Tranwell Woods, Morpeth, Northumberland.

From Lord Deramore

Sir, The erection of a statue of Sir Arthur Harris is long overdue, as Mr Alan Bramson says (September 30). about the need, in war, to attack as Sir Arthur was appointed Comwell as to defend, On those terms it mander-in-Chief Bomber Command in February 1942, but had a long record of service to this country before that date, having been born in 1892 and fought in the first world war with the Royal Flying Corps.

In claiming that Bomber Command's Firebomb offensive was "militarily senseless" (report, September 28) the German council leaders ignore a published statement by Albert Speer [Hitler's architect]: As far as I can judge from the accounts I have read no one has yet seen that this was the greatest battle lost un the German side. The tosses from the retreats in Russia nr from the surrender of Stalingrad were considerably less. Moreover, the nearly 20,000 anti-air-craft guns stationed in the homeland could almost have doubled the anti-tank defences nn the eastern front. Yours sincerely, Heslington House, Aislaby. Pickering North Yorkshire.

Sir, I have been in correspondence with the German President, Dr Richard von Weizsacker, and am pleased to quote from his speech to the Bundestag on May 8, 1985, the fortieth anniversary of the cessation of bostilities, a copy of which he sent me. A relevant passage translates: May 8 was a day of liberation. It liberated all of us from the system of National Socialist despotism which despised human beings. When the statue of "Bomber" Harris is unveiled next year I shall think of him and the 55,000 young men of Bomber Command who gave their lives in the cause of the liberation which President Weizsácker so graciously aeknowledged. Yours faithfully, JOHN A. ATKINSON,

From Mr D. B. Sinclair Sir. This country owes a debt to all who fought in the second world war, but why spend £100,000 on a memorial to one man? Surely a plaque costing up to, say, £5,000, with the balance being used to help either the young or ex-servicemen nr their families would be more appropriate. DISCRETION OF THE VALIANT

The Bomber Command Association should abandon its project to erect a statue to Sir Arthur "Bomber" Harris outside St Clement Danes in the Strand. For the veterans of Bomber Command, whose British and Commoowealth aircrews lost 55,573 dead in the highest British casualty rate of the war, the absence of a public tribute to their leader may be bitter. But it is justified by more than the danger of reopening old wounds, evidenced by The Times story last week that German mayors, led by those of Dresden and Pforzheim, object strongly to the statue.

Correspondence on the story, as on this page today, indicates that partisan emotions are still aroused by Harris's war record. The public was deceived by the government about the indiscriminate nature of the night raids, and in the absence of any other way of hitting Germany itself, the strategic air offensive was a morale-booster at home. A Times leader voiced the country's mood after the first thousand-bomber raid: "These first blasts of the whirlwind that Hitler, who sowed the wind at Warsaw and Rotterdam, has oow to reap have raised the spirits of the fighters for freedom everywhere."

Churchill used area bombing as a substitute for the second front io his diplomatic poker-game with Stalin. All along, Churchill willed the end: Harris merely gave him the means. The means was the "de-housing" of as many Germans as possible; the end was to break their morale. The policy failed. Some 600,000 German civilians died, but the Nazi war machine did not break until the spring of 1945. Harris's superiors never persuaded him to switch the huge bomber force he had built by 1944 to concentrate on precise targets such as oil refineries or transport. But neither was he dismissed.

The area bombing of cities continued unchecked by anything except resources. These were colossal: some historians put the figure as high as one third of the entire British war effort. Harris was supported by the public, military commanders and politicians alike until almost the end of the war and he used his reputation to ignore protests from Bishop Bell of Chichester and others, and override the scruples of deeply worried subordinates.

Only with the destruction of Dresden three months before the armistice did public opinion, and Churchill, turn against saturation bombing. Once Germany was occupied and the scale of the devastation became clear, Harris was made the scapegoat. He died seven years ago. But he never pretended he was only obeying orders. He was a fanatical believer in carpet bombing of civilians and once said that all the cities of Germany were not worth the bones of a British grenadier.

Harris was undoubtedly treated shabbily but the policy of which he was so outspoken an advocate was a severe blot on Britain's war record. What was reprehensible was that his treatment should have diminished the reputation of his brave men. They received no campaign medal. They at least deserve proper commemoration; their association should direct itself to that end.

Darwin's children

From Professor Williom T. Stearn Sir, Fiona McCarthy (Saturday Review, September 28) refers to Charles Darwin, having married his cousin, "fathering so many sickly, backward and neurotic children, who showed all the signs of being inbred".

Admittedly three died in infancy, as did many Victorian children. However, of the surviving "sickly, backward" ones, William, a success-ful banker, lived to 75; Henrietta, author, to 87; George, FRS, professor of astrocomy, Cambridge, to 67; Elizabeth to 79; Francis, FRS, lecturer in botany, Cambridge, to 77; Leonard, major in the Royal Engineers, to 93; Horace, FRS, founder of the Cambridge Instrument Company and mayor of Cambridge, to 79.

Election to the Royal Society, like the Royal Academy, may at times be erratic but "backwardness", except as manifested by three of Darwin's sons, has never been a qualification.

Outbreeding maintains variability and evolutionary potential but occasional inbreeding, as in the Darwin-Wedgwood family, may concentrate the good qualities of a good stock.

OBITUARIES

SIR LESLIE MAVOR

Air Marshal Sir Leslie (Deane) "Duke" Mayor, KCB, AFC. former principal of the Home Defence College, Easingwold, died on October 2 aged 75. He was born on January 18, 1916.

WHEN the Heath government resolved in the early 1970s to revive pubbe interest in civil defence — which had been placed on a care and maintenance basis by Harold Wilson - Duke (as he was universally known) Mayor was one of those to whom it turned. His specialised knowledge and his appetite for planning made him a natural choice to run the civil defence college which was being reconstituted in North Yorkshire.

As chief of RAF Training Command for the previous three years he had worn a second hat as Air Commander Home Defence Forces - a crucial post in the event of nuclear war. He was said, moreover, to have one of the sharpest minds in the armed forces - a reputation acquired as Assistant Chief of the Air Staff (Policy) during Denis Healey's defence review in the late 1960s. He had been tipped to join the board of Rolls-Royce cars on retiring from the RAF in 1973 - but instead accepted the Home Office's born on February 23, 1903.

FEW scholars in recent times have been thanked in prefaces to works of classical scholarship more often than Harry Sandbach. Kirk and Raven dedicated their Presocratic Philosophers to him. Generous to the ideas of others, he was perhaps over-critical of his own, and for many years his published contribution to learning was confined to articles and book reviews. It was therefore something of a surprise when the name of Sandbach appeared in the first list of personal professorial chairs that the University of Cambridge ever published (1967).

But those who had placed their faith in Sandbach were soon to see that faith justified. In the following year he was elected to the British Academy. Up to this time the only work of his to appear in hard covers had been his contributions to some of the Loeb volumes of Plutarch's Moralia and a closely related slender volume in the Teubner series. But in 1972 and 1973 two major and complementary works of scholarship came undeservedly modest title by Gomme. "It is right that sought his advice. Gomme should have the main credit for what is good; for all that is wrong I accept responsibility," Sandbach characteristically wrote in the preface; happily no informed reader has taken him at his word. A foreign reviewer, while commenting on Sandbach's abnormal modesty, described the edition as "of priceless worth", and the commentary as remarkable for having oothing superfluous while remaining alive to tiny nuances in the Greek. Later two slighter books appeared, one on the Stoics (1975) and another oo the Comic Theatre of Greece and Rome (1977), both of them enthusiastically received.

Francis Henry Sandbach

Professor Francis Sandbach, was a son of Francis Edward Greek scholar, died on September 18 aged 88. He was years professor of German at Birmingham Educated at King Edward School, Birmingham, and Trinity College, Cambridge, he em-barked in 1924 on research which he continued during his tenure of an assistant lectureship in the University of Manchester.

He returned to Cambridge in 1928 and soon afterwards he was appointed as college lecturer in classics and to a university lectureship . This he held, concurrently with the Brereton readership in classics, from 1951 until he retired in 1970. Apart from the three years that he spent as a young man in Manchester and for a period of national service during the second world war. Sandbach devoted his life to Cambridge and in particular to his college where he was a tutor from 1945 to 1955. Often slow in speech and sometimes, it seemed, slow in thought, his judgment was so uniformly sound that his help was as eagerly sought as it was freely given. But he never allowed administrative preoccupations to take precedence over scholastic enout his Oxford Text of deavour. If this, the first Church congress of this century, was o time for retrospection, it was also a time for looking to the future, o future fraught with many similar difficulties as those 90 years later.

> CAUSE FOR ANXIETY IN THE CHURCH

The ecclesiastical revival of the past sixty years has done much for the Church and the nation. It has restore old and multiplied new churches. It has raised the standard both of public worship and of clerical life. It has stimulated missionary zeal, and caused the expansion of the Church to keep pace with the expension of the Empire, so that abroad as well as at home it has been marked by strenuous efforts to rise to the responsibilities of an Imperial as well as a National Church.

But as serious Churchmen look forward, there is much to cause anxiety, if not misgiving. The in-crease of wealth with its attendant materialism, the rise of social and economic problems unknown a century ago, the inroads of critical research upon established faiths and traditions, and the growing tendency to disregard the ministrations of religion call for increased power and for increased effort, if the Church is to bold her ground as a guide and purifier of national life.

Yet along with the ever-increasing calls upon her efforts there are ominous signs of increasing inability to meet them. The growing poverty of the clerical calling, leading to a decrease in the number of candidates for the ministry; the decline in the supply of a learned clergy, able to cope with intellectual difficulties and the problems of criticism, at least upon a level with the schicated laity: and the consequently diminishing influence of the pulpit over men these are ugly phenomena, recestranging Churchmen upon trivial matters, so often paralyse religious effort, are noted with a certain hopeless resignation. These thoughts, coupled with the undoubted fact that in the life of great cities, which more and more colours our national life, the Church has small hold over the masses of the people, and may even be said to be well damp the enthusiasm, though we hope that it does not weaken the resolution, of the representative Churchmen assembled in congress. No impartial reader of their proceedings could fail to note this element of

We have reported those proceedings so fully that there is less occasion for detailed comment. The subjects, as we have before noted, were well chosen; the most interestwere well chosen; the most interest-ing of them, apparently, to the Congress at large being that of Wednesday upon Authority in the Church of England, overlapping to some extent the ground of Thursday morning's discussion of the Reformstion Settlement and the appeal to antiquity, and that of Thursday afternoon upon the social problems of housing the poor and dealing with "Hooliganism."

Three excellent papers on the housing question were read. The outcome of the three papers was that little reliance can be placed upon what Mr Masterman termed "successive waves of gusty philanthropy"; that some check must be put upon private enterprise, charac-terized by the same speaker as " the free play of competitive greed"; and that State or municipal action alone can deal adequately with the problem_

Gold fever: Stanley Holloway and Alec Guinness (8.00pm)

CHOICE: Hardened viewers may complain that they have seen The Lavander Hill Mob so often that they can recite it backwards but it is one of the handful of films that tamiliarity never stales. T.E.B. Clarke's screenplay, for which he won an Oscar, is based on a simple comic idea which is brilliantly worked through. On top of that, the film has the great virtue of brevity. No one these days would dare to end a cinema leature after less than 80 minutes but would dare to end a cinema leature after less than 80 minutes but The Lavender Hill Mob knows exactly when to atop. In one of his delightfully quirky Ealing roles, Alec Guinness plays a meek little bank clerk who gangs up with Stanley Holloway to rob his own bank. This apparently perfect crime leads to adventures in Paris and a climactic police chase through bomb-scarred London. The ingredients are skilfully orchestrated by the director Charles Crichton, who many years later made A Fish Called Wands

Presenting Top of the Pops in 1964: Jimmy Savije (8.00pm)

CHOICE: The BBC has raided its own archives to come up with a ten-part retrospective of pop music as it was televised a generation ago. Despite the outrage of Mrs Mary Whitehouse, recalled in a clip at the end of the tonight's compilation, the overriding impression is of overwhelming respectability. Young men plucking guitars in neat suits and glasses could have come straight out of a church choir and even the Rolling Stones are about as subversive as Vera Lynn, Pop was still a comfortable family entertainment. Top of the Pops was starting to get established but pop artists were just as likely to turn up on children's shows such as Blue Peter or Crackerjack. Or even be introduced by Lenny the Lion. The images are in black and white, the camerawork can be primitive and most of the songs, and some of the performers, have worn badly. But for those of a cartain age it will be deeply nostalgic 8.30 Home Boys From Hollywood. Documentary profiles of Hollywood's black film directors

9.30 Performance: Absolute Hell.

CHOICE: A season of televised stage plays opens with a drama by Rodney Ackland which displeased both the critics and the Lord Chamberlain when it was first performed in 1952. Since most of the characters are either drunk, or gay or obsessed with sex, or various combinations of all three, p. thaps that is not surprising. Even by the liberated standards of the 1990s it is hardly family viewing. Ackland uses a drinking club in London in the weeks after the end of the second world war as the focus for a group of misfits and outsiders to play out their outrich-like lives. Reality, in the form of the Labour victory at the 1945 general election, obtrudes but only just. Among a strong cast relishing the macabre humour of it all are Judi Dench as the gin-sodden hostess with a leaning towards hunky Gis, Betty Marsden as a lesbian literary critic and

Humorous Interplay: Danny Glover and Mel Gibson (9.35pm)

9.35 Flint Lethal Wespon (1987). CHOICE: Mel Gibeon gave his faltering career a welcome lift with this fast and exciting thriller about a couple of Los Angeles cops on the trail of a vicious drugs ring. The "lethal weapon" of the title, Gibson, is a former Vietnam veteran who has been unhinged by the death of his wife. His partner (Danny Glover) is a decent family man who wants a quiet life and a pension at the end of it. The interplay between Gibson and Glover gives the film much of its bita and also injects a welcome leavening of humour. Gary Busey plays their main adversary, a psychopath far removed from Busey's screen portrayal of Buddy Holly. Richard Donner, of The Omen and Superman, directs. The film's enormous box-office success led inevitably to a sequel. The violence and bad language has been toned down for this television version. (Oracle)

 6.30 Songs of Praise is Celebrating its 30th Birthday.

 © CHOICE: In popular mythology tha main contribution of Sir Hugh Greene as director-general of the BBC in the 1960s was to unleash a wave of permissive fifth, all the way from Alf Garnett to Up the Junction. Ironically his most enduring legecy is something quite different, a programme which far from undermining traditional values has spent 30 years reinforcing them. The appeal of Songs of Praise is twofold. Most obviously it is a celebration of hymn singing, proving that it is God and not the Devil who has many of the best tunes. Songs of Praise is church with the dull bits left out. More than that it offers reassurance that in a battered and brutal world there are still people who believe, in the face of considerable evidence to the contrary, that goodness will out. Tonight's thirtieth anniversary celebration is a live broadcast linking congregations in London, Cardiff, Glasgow and Northern Ireland. (Ceefax) (a)

Ruling the roost: Sean Bean with Prince the Alsatian (9.20pm)

- 9.20 Screen One: Prince (1991). CHOICE: Were this first screenplay by the journalist Julie Birchill not based on her own family, it might be difficult to believe. It is a tale of an Alsatian dog that so takes over a household that the wife (Celia Montague) does not dere go to the loo for fear of inviting the animal'a snarl. Holidays are disrupted, neighbours antagonised. Worst of all Prince's doting owner (Sean Bean), makes it very clear worst or all Prince's doung owner (Sean Bean); markes it very clear to his spouse and young daughter (Jackie McGuire) that the dog always comes first. Perhaps astonishingly, the wife sits back and takes it. Admittedly we are in the early 1960s, when women's lib had not quite emerged. Most of tonight's audience will probably be screaming at her to stand up for herself. Prince has amusing moments and clever lines but it is more a collection of incidents. than a coherent drama. The device of using the daughter as an adult to narrate the story only underlines this. (Ceetax) (s)

- 7.15 The Birth of Europe. CHOICE: A seven-part series from the BBC's Natural History Unit offers a view of European history that leaves out tha kings and generals and stresses the importance of geology and environment. In tonight's programme we hear how a succession of ice ages shaped the European landscape, how man arrived in Europe from Africa and how a way of life based on hunting and gathering was transformed by the invention of agriculture. The Birth of Europe is written and produced by Michael Andrews, a television wildlife veteran best known for The Flight of the Condor. plastic dummy and actors are used to show how early cave dwellers might have lived. Otherwise the programme relies on real thing, from flint tools to wall paintings. There is no preser but the commentary is alrong enough to stand without one

Mustrated guide to mental disorder: Dr Jonathan Miller (8.10cm)

- 6.10 Ma dness: To Define True Madness. (Ceefax)
- CHOICE: Faced with finding a way into a slippery concept, Dr Jonathan Miller settles on autobiography. He claims a dual qualification for the job, as the son of a psychiatrist and as a theatre director who believes that plays are an Indispensable source for the mentality of other times. The "mad" scene from Hamlet inevitably follows. Miller offers, in effect, an illustrated lecture, delivered from what looks like a musty and abandoned film set. Offering a rich diet of ideas, this is not a series to be viewed casually. Miller's sentences can be long and complex. But the main point of tonight's opener is clear enough. Miller shows how a view of madness as possession by spirits and demons gave way during the 17th century to an explanation stressing physical causes, for which the "cure" was vomits, purges and bleedings. The madness theme continues in tonight's two feature films. (Ceefax)
- 9.10 Film: One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest (1975): Milos Forman's powerful drama starring Jack Nicholson and Louise Fletcher, Charged with asseult and statutory rape Nicholson is transferred from a penal work farm to the Stata Mental Hospital, He is the sane patient who manages to bring some hope into the lives of the other inmates. Nicholson and Fletcher both won Oscars for their performances and the film also received awards for best picture, best director and its screenplay.
- 11.20 Film: Spellbound (1945, b/w). Hitchcock film some way below his best but with brilliant touches in which a psychoanalyst (Ingrid Bergman) falls for her boss (Gregory Peck) despite knowing that he is an amnesiac and possibly a killer. Ends at 1.10am

Chris Scott, vice-chairman of the association, said: "We are sad that the department chose to indicate that if Mr Withers had still been in their employment they would have laid as yet still unspecified charges against him. That does oot seem the action that a caring employer should take against a man with a long and distinguished career." Mr Withers was removed as governor after the escape.

The gossip columnist, Liz Smith, an old friend of Taylor, is the only reporter officially invited and will cover the event for Fox television.

Happy as pigs in sheer ecstasy

NAPOLEON. (Orwell relates), the top boar at Animal Farm, assuring visitors there was no longer anything threatening in his organisation, makes a keynote speech to his animals

"He was happy, he said, that the period of misunderstanding was at an end. For a long time there had been rumours ... that there was something subversive, even revolutionary, in the outlook of himself and his colleagues.

"He did not believe, he said, that any of the old suspicions still lingered, but certain changes had been made recently ... hitherto the animals had had a rather foolish habit of addressing each other as 'Comrade'. This was to be suppressed".

Labour's synchronised ecstasy at Brighton this week has rivalled the Tories in its power to nauseate. I watched from the wings yesterday as the sweetly choreographed scene, its mood hovering somewhere between a Welsh rugby crowd and a Come Dancing revival, played out the final moments with Mr Kinnock conducting. The sight of Roy Hattersley, in open-monthed horror as his comrades — colleagues — on the platform struck up a karaoke rendering of "We are the champions" by Queen, will never be forgot-ten. The conference platform makes an impressive sight oo TV, but from my vantage point I could see both the visible and the concealed part of the structure. I could see the white pediments, the dolmen frothing with four dozen red roses and the raked terraces of Roman-style seating for the Great Ones.

And I could see the underbelly: the poles and trailing cables: the canvas tacked on to plywood to form the apparent marble walls; the tangle of scaffolding proppiog the whole thing up from behind. I could see the autocue machines, too, scrolling silently forward as the Great Ones spoke. My colleague on The Guardian whispered: "Why do the TV cameras never show the

WEEK ENDING Matthew Bond

Arnie's phoney

Senior executives at GEC are already arguing over what they should call the new Rover they hope to unveil at the 1993 Motor Show Top of the shortlist, apparently, is the Metsun Cherry. GEC's marketing gurus believe it has a certain ring to it.

But then the main events (or perhaps non-events) of the week had a certain ring to them. It is, after all, less than two years since GEC spent 11 anxious days looking down the barrel of a Smith & Metsun brandished by Sir John Cuckney, then the outgoing chairman of Westland. The sigh of corporate relief that went up after Sir John was finally forced to admit that somewhere along the line he had mislaid his ammunition was big enough to he picked up by

Despite living to fight another day, the experience clearly left its mark on Lord Weinstock, the man whose immoveability as GEC's managing director is matched only by that of the GEC share price. Arnie withdrew to his cash-mountain top retreat and mused on the lessons to be learned. The period of contemplation was clearly a success, but the manner in which Sir John's strategy would appear to be being revisited by Lord Weinstock however, has raised more than a few evebrows. For just as John Wakeham decided that the news that there would be no November general election hardly merited a full press conference, so the £3 billion worth of predatory ambition that GEC apparently harbours towards British Aerospace was trickled, none too gently, into the market. But if there is one thing that the Stock Exchange does not like it is things that trickle into the market.

A request for clarification met with only partial success. Sir Graham Day at British Aersopace, perhaps mindful of the number of enemies that BAe's £432 million rights issue had already won the company, was eager 10 set the regulatory mind at rest. BAe was not talking to anyone, he said compliantly. Lord Weinstock, who does not have a rights issue requiring shareholder approval on Monday, said nothing Blanks or bullets? Only time will tell.

hareholders due to attend BAe's extraordinary meeting on Monday will doubtless be giving the rights issue document close scrutiny this weekend, particularly if they have the double misfortune of owning shares in Mountleigh, the accident prone property group. For at Mountleigh's annual meeting this week, a number of shareholders were seen searching their rights issue document in vain for the clause that said that less than six weeks after the £96 million rights issue had been completed it was the intention of the company's chairman, chief executive and managing directors to resign.

With Sir Roland Smith already gone, BAe's remaining executives must be hoping the growing resemblance between the two companies stops there.

But some good will come out of the Mouotleigh affair. With Nelson Peltz, Peter May and Marc Leland signalling their intention to remain on the board in a non-executive capacity, Mountleigh's board now boasts no less than eight non-executive directors out of a total of 13. Corporate governance is clearly alive and well. Isn't it good to know that there are so many people safeguarding shareholders' interests?

BUSINESS PROFILE: David James

Sickly child to company doctor

Despite being 'just about' a millionaire, the saviour of several firms still feels insecure, Carol Leonard discovers avid James, the doyen of company doctors, the Red Adair of the corporate world, has no professional qualifications, charges £1,000 a day for his services and his 70 or so patients so far, have all survived.

Despite his extraordinary track record, the past six weeks have, he says, been the most emotionally trying of his career. In eight days, he has completed his refinancing plans for Davies & Newman, the Dan-Air airline group; with a £53 million coovertible preference share placing, posted letters to Eagle Trust shareholders explaining that a similar financial reconstruction has been agreed for them; and received confirmation that his nomination papers, as one of ten candidates for two vacant seats have been accepted. As soon as one patient nears likes to have another already under strict medical supervisioo (Eagle Trust) and to have his eyes oo a third, still sickly corporate structure (Lloyd's). Davies & Newman lost £38 million last year. Mr James became chairman and chief executive in November. The company is forecast to lose £35 million this year, after haemorrhaging almost £1 million a day during the Gulf war, but Mr James, aged 55, is now projecting a profil of £19 million by the end of 1992. He has also saved an estimated 8,500 jobs in the with £74 million missing. One of its subsidiaries was then found to he involved in the Iraqi supergun affair. Mr James became chair-man and chief executive in September that year. The com-pany now has writs outstanding against Swiss Bank Corporation, owner of Savory Milln, Eagle's former stockbroker, for £13.5 million, and against Peat Marwick, the accountant for about £50 million. Mr James says: "I will stay on with Davies & Newman at least until the AGM next year, in May or June." Eagle Trust, where Lloyds Bank, Standard Chartered and National Westminster have just agreed to a debt-for-equity refinancing package of up to £20 million, will take a little longer. "I will remain involved with Eagle Trust for a number of years, because of the very long legal programme, but my workload and fee income have already been substantially reduced and will contioue to reduce." As for Lloyd's, Mr James has been a name for eight years, is currently writing up to £850,000 of business a year and wants a seat on the council "because I am dissatisfied with much about Lloyd's but I don't like quitting". He expresses concern about the continued existence of loopholes that might still permit criminal activity, and the "dreadful PR", which has, be says, "made Lloyd's names look ridiculous in the cycs of the public - you would think we were all now

Far from living in a cardboard box, Mr James spends at least one night a week with his mother, Alsina, aged 79, at her bome in Lee, south London, and the rest of the time commutes from his penthouse flat in Hove, East Sussex. He has oever married although he was once engaged and has "come close" on two other occasions. He says: "I have a long-standing lady friend, but I doo't think either she or I would regard each other as exclusive. The old problems of my life still recovery (Dan-Air), Mr James make an enduring relationship almost impossible — from time to time I will go off the air for four or six weeks while I get totally committed to a job."

Mr James insists he is not lonely, that he has other interests, such as opera twice a week - he is a Wagner fan; cricket - "when I retire I would love to spend the winters following the England team"; and racing - "I have my diary booked out for Ascot and Goodwood. I love the horses and the science of the form book." Even they are dropped, however, if his work demands.

Tony Garrett, a chartered secretary, who has worked with Mr James on several projects and is cited by Mr James as his best friend, much to Mr Garrett's surprise, admits that he finds this single-minded commitment to work difficult to cope with.

Mr Garrett says: "He can be very single minded, to the exclusion of everything else, and I think that is perhaps why he is still a bachelor. I have a great deal of admiration for David but it is mixed with sympathy because although he has been so successful in one area of his life, he has

He says: "I'm now an anti-cleric, anti institutionalised religion because 1 believe it represents a limitation of the human spirit." He was morally obliged to decline the Oxford course. One of his biggest regrets is that he did not go to university. He says it has left him with a feeling of inferiority, of "always coming from behind". Each time he completes the rescue of a company, and despite a steady stream of offers, he feels as if he will never he offered anything eise. His deep-seated financial insecurity bubbles to the surface. That insecurity stems from his childhood, from war-time memories of evacuation, of returning to Blackheath with no furniture because the depository had been burned - "We slept on camp beds under newspapers" - and of his mother having less than a pound in her pocket to last until pay day. His father, an awesome figure who had begun life as a kitchen boy at a night club and became catering director of Watney, was unemployed for six

He cannot even recall having any childhood friends. Afflicted by chronie asthma in his early years, later diagnosed as an allergy to cat fur, Mr James only learned to read when he was ten and was, by then, already labelled the schoolroom idiot and mercilessly teased. He even says that one of the reasons be never married was because he never felt be had sufficient money to take care of a mortgage and school fees. When he could afford it - by his mid-forties - he was, he says, too old.

Surprisingly, however, Mr James is not motivated by money alone. He has missed out on a fortune by refusing, on a point of principle, to take equity stakes in the companies he salvages.

So what is it that still drives him? "I have an eternal need to test myself. It is part of my attempt to get out of that back row of the classroom." He now wants to tackle something "of national consequence", and suggests either The Royal Opera or the racing industry. He admits that his amhitions, hand in hand with his fragile confidence, have grown over the years and that he now wants to leave his mark. Mr James realises, bowever, that in so doing, his unbeaten track record is exposed. "Yes, there is a degree of Russian roulette," he says. Giving credit for a good education

By LINDSAY COOK MONEY EDITOR

WHAT is the difference between a student with an overdraft and a graduate with an overdraft? The answer is creditworthiness. Thousands of graduates are being wooed by the Bank of Scotland and offered college or university credit cards to help fund activities at their Alma Mater. Students are excluded from the scheme.

'Alumni" cards were launched by the Bank of Scotland a year ago and are now gaining in popularity, with 36 educational institutions having signed up. They range from Bolton Institute of Higher Education to Strathelyde University. Aberdeen University cards were the first to he issued and this week Edinburgh University graduates were invited to apply.

In coming months, graduates of the London School of Economics, Brunel University and former pupils of King's School, Canterbury, will be among those mailed.

The affinity cards work like all others in that the organisation benefiting signs up with a bank and supplies it with a list of members - in this case, former students.

When applications are accepted, the bank pays the college an agreed sum, and each time the cardbolder uses the card a small amount is paid to the college. Typically, affinity cards pay £5 for each new customer and 25p per £100 spent. With the alumni cards, different rates have been negotiated. Unlike the bank's Classic Visa card, there is no annual fee. The interest rate is university credit card.

slightly higher, though, at 28.8 per cent APR compared with 28.4 per cent for the Classic Visa card. The bank said alumni applicants were assessed under the normal credit-scoring procedure, although some factors were regarded as positive that might not be for a standard card. The bank expected new graduates to have moved recently and not to have much service with their employers. Usually, card applicants would score less favourably if they seemed transitory.

This would explain how one graduate turned down by a larger bank for a standard credit card was readily accepted as a customer by Bank of Scotland for a imminent A HIGH Court judge will give his decision on Monday on the application by Asil Nadir, the chairman of Polly Peck, to strike out a bid by his creditors to have him jailed for contempt of court.

The creditors, the Inland Revenue and eight banks that are owed £80 million, have launched a committal move against Mr Nadir for alleged breaches of an undertaking, given in bankruptcy proceedings last November, not to dispose of his assets.

The alleged breaches centre on a $27 million deal by Mr Nadir to sell his shares in the Impexbank, of Turkey, to a group of Turkish businessmen last December.

The creditors, who later agreed a compromise with Mr Nadir that led to their bankruptcy petition being dismissed, have complained that they were kept in the dark about the full details of the deal, which gave Mr Nadir a three-year option to huy back

Talk of G7 deal fuels yen rise

By COLIN NARBROUGH ECONOMICS CORRESPONDENT

THE yen surged against the dollar on mnunting speculation that the Group of Seven finance ministers were preparing to agree on a stronger yen to reduce Japan's persistantly large trade sur-pluses. Official current account data, showing Japan's August surplus at $5.48 billion, six times higher than a year earlier, fuelled market expectation about a deal on the yen, most likely to emerge when G7 ministers meet in Bangkok next weekend.

The August current account surplus, which followed a $5.04 hillion surplus in July, reflected a 10.3 per cent jump in Japanese exports, primarily cars, electronics and chemicals, and a 10.8 per cent drop in imports, as gold and luxury goods purchases fell. This boosted the surplus on visible trade to $8.25 hillion, more than double the surplus in August 1990. The deficit on services narrowed by 14.1 per cent to $2.53 billion, despite a record $2.13 billion shortfall on tourism, while the $11.84 billion surplus from a $4.89 deficit a year earlier. Japanese authorities sought to set a floor under the falling dollar, with Bank of Japan officials expressing concern about the "excessive" rise of the yen. Hiroshi Yasuda, vice-minister of finance, sought to dampen speculation, saying the G7 was unlikely to discuss a stronger yen or a new range for the dollar.

At the Tokyo opening, the dollar stood at Y129.75, against Y132.70 on Thursday morning. Comments from Ryutaro Hashimoto, the outgoing finance minister, that his ministry was monitoring the market, appeared to calm currency dealers, allowing the dollar to recover some ground.

He suggested that expectations of lower interest rates in America, as well as the growing Japanese surpluses, might be the reason for the downward pressure on the dollar.

☐ Industrial output in western Germany fell 1.3 per cent in August, according to provisional government figures. Although the seasonally adjusted data were seen as confirmation of a long-term capital account swung to a slowdown, they were exaggerated by fewer working days in August, a factor not picked up in the adjustments. In July, production feil 1.4 per cent. July and August together showed little change from the previous two months. but were still 2.7 per cent above the same period in 1990.

The French economy returned to growth in the second quarter, with gross domestic product up 0.8 per cent, after a flat first quarter, according to final data from the national statistics offfice.

Exports were markedly higher, while imports eased. Domestic consumption was little changed. Manufacturing output rose 1.2 per cent in the second quarter, after falling 0.9 per cent in the first. ☐ In America, the closely watched labour market data showed unemployment dropping to 6.7 per cent last month, having been stuck at 6.8 per cent for the previous three months.

The labour department said the slight improvement in September came despite companies' failure to re-hire workers on any significant scale during the month. Only 24,000 jobs were added to the non-farm payroll total, a modest gain for an economy coming out of recession. Denotes midday trading price

RACAL Electronics has attacked the accounting policies of Williams Holdings in its first defence document against the £719 million hostile takeover offer from Nigel Rudd's and Brian McGowan's industrial conglomerate,

The document argues that Williams' all-paper offer is "of uncertain value" because of the company's accounting treatment. Three aspects of Williams' accounts come under attack: the level of disclosure on acquisition accounting the "unusual" inclusion of the pension fund surplus as an asset on the balance sheet, and "the nonstandard" treatment of exceptional items

Racal shareholders are urged to reject the "inequitable, uncertain, opportunistic and inadequate offer

The defence document which does not include a profit forecast, concentrates on Racal's track record since 1966 when Sir Ernest Harrison became chairman and chief executive. Since then, according to Racal, the company "has shown the highest capital growth of any UK electronics sector stock which investors could have held throughout the last 25 years".

It also points to the development of Racal Vodafone fully demerged from its former parent in September and now valued at £3.8 billion. Since April 27, 1988, the day before the announcement of the initial partial demerger of Racal Vodafone, Racal shareholders have seen the value of their holdings increase by 103 per cent, compared with a 44 per cent increase in the FT-SE 100 index and a 23 per cent advance in Williams' share

The document also said that the terms offered by Williams to Yale and Valor shareholders earlier this year proved that the offer undervalued Racal. The £417 million paid for Yale and Valor represented 107 per cent of that company's turnover and a 202 per cent premium to net assets. By contrast, the defence document says, the offer for Racal represents only 46 per cent of its turnover and a 12 per cent premium to net

Mr Roux said that, as a result of Argyll's tactics, Guinness persuaded its supporters to huy its shares as a "corrective" to stabilise their market value - a move he regarded as "completely honest"

Mr Seelig and Lord Spens, a former merchant banker, are accused of taking part in an alleged multimillion pound share-support operation involving undisclosed indemnity payments to help Guinness win its £2.7 billion bid for Distillers in the spring of 1986. Mr Seelig, a former corpor-

Mr Roux said Argyll attacked Guinness in the press, trying to give the impression hat the takeover would barm the company's profits and that it only lannched a counterbid to protect its position in Bell's, an earlier acquisition.

There was also a political campaign that involved making approaches to all those who would be consulted by the Office of Fair Trading in determining whether to refer Guinness's bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. These included the Scottish Office, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and other government departments.

On the legal front, Argyll issued a writ against the Distillers and Guinness merger agreement and sought a judicial review on how Guinness's first offer for the company could lapse so a second one could be made.

Mr Roux said Argyll also attacked Guinness in its hid resentations to institutions.

But Guinness's presentations never mentioned Argyll, concentrating instead on the benefits a merger would bring to the shareholders and the country.

Coutts to cut 170 more jobs

COUTTS, the Queen's bank, has told its staff of 2,100 that 170 of them will be made redundant by Christmas. The message comes after the failure of a voluntary redundancy programme. This attracted only 65 applicants, well short of the 250 job cuts that the bank hopes to make as part of a £12 cost-culting million programme.

The bank, a subsidiary of that it still hoped to redeploy shares, which make up 77 per denied reports that it was three months to August com-cent of the share capital of the planning to close its Campbell's Office in the Strand.

Lamont hails year in ERM a success

By COLIN NARBROUGH ECONOMICS CORRESPONDENT

AMID speculation about an mminent move by Britain to the narrow bands of the European exchange-rate mechanism, Norman Lamont, the Chancellor, has hailed the first year of ERM membership as a success.

But his anniversary statement gave no guidance as to when the government might move the pound from the wide 6 per cent bands to the 2.25 per cent bands. Predictions that Mr Lamoni was ready to tighten the bands immediately, even yesterday, had circulated the market from Thursday afternoon.

The Conservative party conference at Blackpoot next week has been tipped by foreign exchange dealers as a platform from which a move to the narrow bands could be announced, possibly to coincide with another half-point cut in interest rates when the inflation figures are published on Friday. But the pound has been relatively weak, suggesting Mr Lamont has little scope for an early ERM change. At the Bank of England close yesterday, sterling stood at DM2.9162, well below its central rate of DM2.95. Julian Callow, economist at Chase Investment Bank. considered sterling weakness a restraint, but said no Treasury minister had publicly made a commitment to preserve sterling's central rate. This suggested a strong likelihood of a devaluation from DM2.95 to between DM2.85 and DM2.90 when the bands are narrowed. Mr Lamont said the ERM had provided an "invaluable framework" in the fight against inflation. But he sought to dampen hopes of further interest rate cuts, saying that the government's commitment to maintain sterling's ERM parity meant that British interest rates were heavily influenced by those of our European partners. He said the competitiveness

BANKING CORRESPONDENT

THE chief of the clan Forsyth in Scotland has launched a £6 million legal suit against Price Waterhouse, the accountant, for alleged breach of contract and negligence after the collapse of his company, Caledonian. Produce.

Alistair Forsyth of that ilk, Caledonian's chairman, and three of his fellow shareholders have served a writ on the firm, which first advised the company on a reconstruction and was then appointed as its joint receiver. Mr Forsyth, who lives in Ethic Castle near Arbroath, Tayside, suffered heavy losses in the collapse of Caledonian, in which he owned a 10

back but they are a mere shadow of their former selves as seen during the golden age of the Eighties. Witness the Williams Holdings bid for Racal Electronics. The bidder's opening shot was curiously low key and the first defence document from Rac-al, posted yesterday, maintains the impression of a phoney war, Where, for example, are the hitter personal attacks on the aggressor's management, the critical analysis of the hidder's record?

The best that Racal, led by Sir Ernest Harrison, comes up with is a few throwaway lines oo Williams's accounting policies and a reference to the "opportunistic and inadequate" oature of the bid.

But these are still early days and the feeling in the City is that both sides are keeping their powder dry for later io the campaign. Racal believes it has little to fear from the bidder's opening shot and has oot, for example, gone to the trouble of producing a profit forecast. That will come later, after Williams's oext move.

THE TIMES SATURDAY OCTOBER 5 1991

Edited by Lindsay Cook

The oews that the future of the Financial Inter-mediaries Managers and Brokers Regulatory Associatioo (Fimbra) is under review comes as no surprise to many investors further hiurring of the system will and brokers. Nothing seems to have gone right for the regulator. It has barely survived a series of investment scandals from members supposedly vetted by the association, and has had to be baled out twice by the companies of which it is supposed to be independent.

Now, investors face years of wrangling and uncertainty while the Securities and Investments Board decides who should authorise and regulate indepen-dent financial advisers. The fear must be that any change will allow those who have persisted to flout the rules to get away with it for even longer.

It is already difficult enough for investors to have complaints dealt with. They are passed around like parcels from one regulator to another with all of them denying responsibility. A oot help.

Innocent will pick up Fimbra pieces

Some brokers are questioning whether there will be an independent financial adviser sector left to regulate by the time the discussions have ended. The abandonment of the sector by National Westminster Bank is likely to encourage other waverers to sign up with insurance companies. The members of Fimbra are concerned about the cost of providing protection for investors. Too many Fimbra members have disappeared after setting up private investment schemes offering wonderful returns.

Other, innocent members are left to pick up the pieces. Their bill for the compensation scheme has risen. Those running solid, honest businesses have begun to feel that Fimbra membership is oot only costly hut also a liability. The question of who is going to Fimbra has tested the Financial Services Act in the High Court and now accepts that investments made since December 1986 are covered by the scheme. Fimbra had wanted to wriggle out of any responsibility for clients up until August 27, 1988.

Sir Kenneth Clucas, appointed to consider a replacement for Fimbra, has a thankless task in trying to provide an answer to how a disparate group of competing brokers can best be national networks to tiny local

They have one thing io common. They want the regulatory system sorted out so they can get on with their busioess rather than lurching from problem to problem in the knowledge that the honest, careful ooes are likely to pay repeatedly for the sins of others who appear to have been able to continue in their old ways regardless of the new supposedly tougher regime.

Those who are hoping the mess will be sorted out once and for all may give a wry glance at the curriculum vitae of Sir Keoneth and ootice that he has been ao independent member of the Fimhra council sioce 1986.

Bond enquiry

T No one can ever know what goes oo in sitting rooms when salesmeo scent a sale. They will say anything to investors to persuade them to sign on the dotted line for an insurance policy. Some insurance salesmen have been having a field day in the last few months as they sold withprofits bonds oo the strength of much higher returns than those available from huilding societies and banks.

Such has been their success that some companies have become concerned at the verbal promises being made. In some cases, they may even be a little worried that disappointed inves-tors may call on them to honour such guarantees in years to come.

Now, the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisatioo (Lautro) is acting to protect investors from overzealous sales spiel. It is beginning to look at the the way with-profits bonds are sold and has called for the training notes as well as the literature produced by the insurance companies.

It should be ensured that salesmeo understand the degree of risk and that the handsome rates of return cannot be guaranteed before they are let loose on the public.

The likely outcome is that the regulator will issue guidance notes. Lautro is rightly concerned that people may be investing without realising the true nature of the bonds. There is a definite place for them in many investment portfolios. But first the sales staff need to know what they are selling.

Small investors compete as equals in BT sell-off

EACH of BT's 20 million customers should have received a letter this week inviting them to register for shares in half the government's remaining £5 billion, 49 per cent stake in the company.

For the first time in a government sale, private investors will be able to compete oo equal terms with institutional investors if they want to buy more than £3,000 worth of shares. They will also be offered a choice of eight share shops offering cheap dealing. Those who register with BT's share information office will be given preference over people who apply directly on a public application form. Those who register and choose a share shop will be given priority if the issue is oversubscribed. Existing BT shareholders are automatically registered and will be eligible for incentives.

The sale is the latest in the government's privatisatioo programme, which started in 1981 with the sale of British Aerospace. The first half of BT was sold in 1984, attracting 1.4 million registrations and 2.3 millioo applications. About 1.25 million investors ods ai senade blod llite

Less than 4 million of these still hold shares from the issue, however. With the 1986 British Gas flotation, in which 7.5 million people registered and 4.5 million people applied for shares, only 2.19 million still hold some or all of their

Quilter Goodison, the stockbroker, has calculated that someooe holding 100 shares in each privatisation since £2,825. The present capital comes from the Midland, value would be about £7,700. The dividends for the shares would be about £1,200 after tax. The calculation assumes an investment in a local water company and a local electricity eompaoy only. Investors would have benefited from all bonuses and paid all calls.

Norman Lamoot, the Chancellor, anoounced in his Budget that he wanted to deepen share ownership and encourage iovestors to hold on to their shares or sell them to buy other stocks.

SHARE shops and stock-brokers are likely to offer investors the option to put up to £3,000 worth of BT shares into a single company personal equity plan (Pep) when dealing starts in the new issue of shares. Single company Peps were announced in this year's Budget. Investors will still be able to put £6,000 into an ordinary Pep as well as having £3,000 in a single company plan.

Investors will be allowed to put the shares directly into a Pep rather than having to sell them, paying dealing costs, and invest the proceeds; as with existing shares. The Inland Revenue said the sale of BT shares would be considered a new issue, as long as they were put into a Pep within 42 days. Those who intend to pay the two further instalments for the partly-paid shares, however, will have to take out another single company Pep in the oext tax year to avoid exceeding the £3,000

GI ORIENT FUND

Introducing the GT Orient Fund. The right time, the right place, the right hands.

On 7th October, GT will launch a new unit trust, the GT Orient Fund, investing in the Asian markets excluding Japan. The fixed-price offer and 1% launch discount will end on 25th October.

-WHY GT?-

The Far East is home ground for GT. GT has always believed that investment managers should be present on the spot. We opened our first overseas office in Hong Kong over 20 years agn, and know the region like the back of our hands.

Now we also have offices in Singapore and Taiwan (as well as Tokyo, of course). In Asia we employ not only portfolio managers, but also our own economics team.

We have built a record of outstanding success, managing Far Eastern lunds of over £3 billion, out of a total £63 billion under management (as at 19.91).

-WHY THE FAR EAST? -

The dynamic long-term growth trends in Hong Kong, Taiwan, Korea, Malaysia, Singapore, Indonesia and Thailand are already unmisrakable. Now, new and exciting opportunities for direct foreign investment are opening up throughout the Far East as a result of accelerating deregulation and increasing intra-regional trade.

Past performance is not a guide to the future and the price of units and the income from them can down as well as op: .

WHY NOW? -Choosing when to launch the GT Orient Fund has taken full account of the economic cycle of these markets.

We believe conditions are now very favourable to start to rebuild positions in

But selectively. Initially, we will concentrate our assets in the North-East Asian markets where the upswing is already becoming established. To make sure you are there from the start, send off the coupon below for full densits of the GT Orient Fund.

New funds put their trust in commercial property

By RUPERT BRUCE

WAREHOUSES, shops and offices might seem unlikely investments for a unit trust, but two funds investing in commercial property have just been launched.

In theory, the trusts should rise in value as the British ecocomy pulls out of recessigo and commercial property prices rise. Both the new unit trusts, the Norwich Property Trust and the Barclays Unicorn Property Trust, offer a high income yield of about 7.5 per cent gross and the prospect of capital gain later. Neither, of course, is guaranteed and there is a danger that savers could find themselves unable to sell when they want to. In 1981, Henderson Administration, the fund management group, lamched a life fund, called the Prime Residential Property Fund, to invest in residential property in central London. The fund ballooned from £5 million initially to £95 million in the spring of 1987.

Then financial advisers decided it was time their clients invested in the stock market and switched out of the fund. Hendersoo could not sell vestors and no one received a payoot for a year.
The Securities and Investments Board has tried to guard against new style funds repeating this. At most, 80 per cent of funds can be invested in property and the rest must be kept in cash or saleable securities, such as propertyrelated shares or gilts. Henderson's fund, however, was never more than 85 per cent invested in property.

The Norwich Property Trust and the Barclays Property Trust have substantial sums already in the unit trusts, which were previously in unauthorised property funds. This mooey has proved much less fickle than Henderson's was, so as long as the unit trusts do not grow too much, they should out have liquidity Chris Laxton, Norwich Property Trust's fund maoager, said: "Our main life fund unit trust... I think it is pretty important that one does avoid though commercial property prices were depressed at the moment, there was not much scope for investment: There was not enough prime retail or industrial property around for a manager to invest easily the £15 million or so a unit trust might hope to attract, he said. What no one disputes is that prices are at or near the cottom and should rise soon. Kieran Patel, an investment analyst at Hillier Parker, the chartered surveyor, said rental yields on commercial property are at an all time high of 9.4 per cent. They reached a previous high of 8.6 per cent in 1974. Mr Patel said investors were now starting to invest for the income yield, which has stopped rising. The next step must be a rise in prices. The Barclays Unicorn and Norwich Union trusts are concentrating on retail prop-erty. They believe that the British economy will be led out of recession by consumer spending, so shops should be the first to benefit.

Norwich Union is still switching into this type of property. Mr Laxton bought a £925,000 warehouse in Grantham, Lincolnshire, from Halfords last week. At a rent of £6.50 a square foot, the property has a yield of 10.3 per cent. "We feel that there is a prospect for the yield to improve and the rental value to grow," Mr Laxton said.

Investors who agree with this optimistic view of the market should be aware that they can also invest in the commercial property market through shares.

While the two new trusts are not as vulnerable to liquidity crises as the Henderson fund investors should heed the compulsory health warning oo the funds. The Norwich Property Trust warning reads: "Please oote that we may not be able to realise your investment when you choose because If a property unit trust's property in the fund may not in past years. With-profits funds were badly hit by recent slumps in the stock market but the need to compete pushed them into larger payouts than they could afford.

The informal meeting called by Hugh Scurfield, the president of the Institute of Actuaries and chief actuary and general manager of Norwich Union. The last time such a meeting was called by the institute was more than three years ago, a few months after the stock market crash. The life companies fear that they will not be able to sell their policies in a competitive market if they reduce their bonus rates, but their investment experience over the past two years is telling them to do so.

Those present stressed that the institute was not attempting to operate a cartel to reduce bonus rates on with-profits policies. The discussion is, however, likely to influence life companies as they consider the bonus levels decisions on bonus rates in the to set at the end of the year.

Phantom fraudster copied credit card magnetic strip

GERALD and Pat Bradley were surprised when their credit card bill contained 17 items they had not bought from shops they had not visited. When they contacted Barclaycard to find out what had happened, the company arranged to send the sales vouchers to the couple in Bookham, Surrey. Mrs Bradley said: "I think they expected us to see the vouchers and suddenly remember we had bought all the things. When the vouchers arrived they did not match either of our signatures."

The account details were identical to the couple's, neither of whom had lost their cards. Over the next six months, more mysterious items appeared on their bills. These were mostly bought in the Southampton area, although a few were at an electrical shop not far from their home.

Eventually, the Bradleys asked for a new account number and the "phantom" purchases stopped. In the meantime, £1,300 had been billed to the couple, although Barclaycard cancelled all the fraudulent spending when the items were identified.

He said: "In the Far East, they are counterfeiting cards but they cannot be used electronically. In the States, they are copying magnetic strips on to other bits of plastic. We need to look at the best ways of stopping these frauds."

He warned cardholders to take the carbons and destroy them when shopping, especially abroad. Customers should also check their statements carefully and contact their card issuer if there are items they do not recognise. They should also report a missing card immediately.

Barclaycard lannched Franciscatch in June to check all ... vouchers for deviations from the normal pattern of spending. These may indicate a card has been stolen without the owner knowing. Lenders favour smaller mortgages

By LINDSAY COOK

BORROWERS applying for loans of up to £75,000 are being offered a lower interest rate than larger loans by First Mortgage Securities. The smaller loans can be fixed at 10.25 per cent for two years, an annual percentage rate of 12.25 per cent. Larger loans cost 10.6 per cent (APR 12.29 per cent). Larger lenders have been concentrating on those homebuyers wanting to borrow most. The FMS loan has an arrangement fee of £250 and borrowers who redeem during the fixed rate period pay three mooths' interest and one months' thereafter. The North of England Building Society has mortgages fixed at 10.4 per cent for five years (APR 12.1 per cent). There is a £195 application

The Town & Country Building Society is offering a four-year fixed-rate loan at 9.5 per cent in the first year and 10.5 per cent for the following three years. This gives an APR of 12.3 per cent, available on loans above £15,000. There is a £195 application fee. Hill Samuel Mortgage Services has launched a fixed-rate loan over five years at 10.5 per cent (APR 11.3 per cent), which also has a low start option allowing up to 3 per cent of the interest in year one to be deferred. These specified that the definition of borrowers with known debt problems should include those who are three months or more in arrears with mortgage, rent or other loan repayments, or who have a county court judgement against them for more than £250.

Borrowers are also considered high risk if they have more than one county court judgment for any amount. Various types of riskier loans, including those where the interest is rolled up and added to the loan, and low start mortgages, now also require extra capital. Norman Digance, secretary to the commission, said: "We are saying that some types of loan are riskier than standard repayment loans and need

The potential for high capital growth makes buying shares in emerging markets an exciting prospect.

But investing in such markets as Korea, Venezuela, Greece, Malaysia, and Mexico requires highly specialised local knowledge.

So how can you, as a private investor, take advantage of these opportunities?

The answer is to buy shares in an Investment Trust which specialises in emerging markets. Their fund managers have the experience to spot the potential high fliers, at the same time spreading the risk across a wide range of countries, industries and companies. Historically, Investment Trusts were among the first to invest in America, itself an emerging market in the last century. There are also many other types of investment Trust, offering a wide range of opportunities both at home and overseas. Each one is a public company and enables you to buy into a spread of shares at low cost. For more information please send for 'Buying Shares in Investment Trust Companies'. It's free and produced by AITC, the Association that speaks for Investment Trust

Boardman steps up his mileage

CHRIS Boardman, Britain's brightest hope for an Olympic medal in Barcelona next year, will be glad when he finishes his season by defending his national hill climb title near Keighley at the end of the month.

This year, he has gathered a handful of national road and track titles, broken a world record and, more recently, in-spired a oational 4,000 metres team pursuit record on the Olympic track. "it's been a hard year and the pressure has never been off," he said.

Boardman fears that he has eased back too much in his training recently; why else, he asks, was he beaten for only the second time this year in a road mee last weekend? The defeat, he believes, was not because of a tactical error but rather a physical weakness.

This week, be has stepped up his training from a standard eight hours to 14 in the hope that he can win, for a fifth time, the Merseyside invitation 32-

Bough's switch puts ITV's rugby on top

Generous to join the greats

RACING CORRESPONDENT

THE heart and the form book say Generous first, the rest nowhere as the best field for more than 20 years lines up for the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe at Longchamp tomorrow. Sadly, history and the record books predict a less happy

Generous will be the tenth favourite for the race from Britain in the past 26 years, and the fifth in the last six years. Yet only two great horses, Mill Reef in 1971 and Dancing Brave in 1986, have justified being market leaders. Even winning the Derby is not a passport to success. Mill Reef is the only English-trained colt to have completed the Epsom-Longchamp double since the war. The 11 "failures" include Sir Ivor, Nijinsky, Troy and Reference

And so, as Alan Munro dons the dark green silks of Prince Fahd Salman at around 4pm tomorrow, he will know that the statistics and rich history of the Arc are not on his side. To make matters worse, the young jockey has six other classic winners to beat in his first Arc - a record number which makes tomorrow's race one to savour. However, records exist to be broken and any reading of the form book has Generous and Suave Dancer well clear of their rivals. According to Timeform, Paul Cole's flaxenmaned son of Caerleon is 4lb ahead of John Hammond's French challenger.

More significantly, the Halifax sages have Generous rated when you consider the previous Arc winners to have attained such a mark. Since 1951 there have been only five: Ribot, Sea-Bird II, Vaguely Noble, Mill Reef and Dancing Brave.

Thursday's Middle Park Stakes runner-up Lion Cavern. However, the narrowness of the winning margin and the apparent lack of distinction of the opposition make it rather surprising that the winner should now stand at such a short price for the Guineas.

He finished two lengths away second, after hav-ing been given by no means a hard race by Ray Cochrane when it was clear that the winner had the issue well in

"That was perfectly satisfac-tory," said his trainer Guy Harwood. "He's only been back in work for about five weeks and just got tired. All being well, he's still on target for the Champioo

Eager Scots to adopt a positive approach

Ferguson, who has more European experience than any other British manager, did not believe that there was any advantage in being drawn away first until the quarterfinal and semi-final rounds.

"We have learned the importance of scoring an away goal in European ties. Getting one makes life more comfortable in the return, but failing to score away leaves you vulnerable at home. We are just pleased to have avoided Manchester United in the draw," Shreeves said. "That would not have done either club any favours," Lynagh kicked a couple of penalties, Argentina's only response at that stage being Arbizu's dropped goal. With Horan's try and Lynagh's conversion, Australia were well oo the way to realising the early foundation they wanted for a high score.

Teran's try before half-time seemed only an aberration such was Australia's control. But they were far from fluid. It was after Kearns's try two minutes after half-time that Argentina woke up to the possibilities of del Castillo's penalty and his conversion of Teran's second try.

With Horan and Little clogging up the midfield, Campese was largely left to linger. But he is never a man likely to remain in limbo, Farr-Jones's midfield scissors opened up the space for his try, which Lynagh cooverted. Then, the winger, from a seemingly hopeless position which Eales had created by throwing a wayward pass, broke through the middle. When his way was finally barred, he gave Horan the space for the try. Lynagh's cooversion brought his total to 65 in 48 internationals. Arbizu dropped a second penalty for Argentina.

Ray Williams, the tournament director, said part of the problem had been caused by a double booking of some overseas packages, a human error (to which the RFU would admit it is susceptible in light of the most recent Pilkington Cup draw, which had to be made twice). It was inevitable, he added, that there would be some late returns before any major international.

The RFU ticket office estimated that 1,200 tickets came back from the travel packages last week: 24 hours later it was told that the press area, extended to accommodate 850 journalists, would be occupied by some 600 and then there were further returns from overseas unions, which should have confirmed their oumbers months in advance. "After all the reservation that had to be made elsewhere allocations to our clubs fin ished at about one-fifth of what the clubs asked for, Richard Ankerson, the ticke officer, said. "That is about or a par with an England-Wales match played on a Saturday.'

In Williams's view, how ever, the opening day of the second World Cup went well even though the low cloud forced the cancellation of Wales's plan, page 36 parachute display by the RAR Competition, page 37 Falcons team.
